Winter Feeding of Dairy Cows

(Experimental Farms Note.)

Cows are fed in the stable during one half of the year or more and feeding during this period may, through ignorance or on account of using unsuitable feeds, be made very expensive. The profits from the herd will, of course, depend to a large extent on the economy of the methods of winter feeding followed.

Economical feeding does not mean scant supplies, but the using of the kinds of feeds and feed combinations that will be likely to produce the best results at the lowest cost.

As the milk produced depends upon the quantity and quality of the feed consumed, every effort should be made to supply the cow with all she will eat of a ration combining palatability, easy digestibility, variety and nutrition.

The most economical ration must have as a basis, cheap but rich, nutritious, farm-grown roughages such as clover hay, ensilage and roots. The liberal feeding of meals is advisable to balance the roughage ration and to provide the heavy milking cow with an extra supply of nutrients in a less bulky form.

A pound of grain when the cow is fresh is equivalent to several pounds of grain after the cow has decreased materially in her milk flow. Feed one pound of meal for every 3 1-2 pounds of milk produced; as her lactation period progresses, decrease the meal gradually to one pound for every five pounds of milk produced.

The following are two well-balanced daily rations for the 1,000 pound dairy cow suitable to the individual needs of farmers throughout the district:

No. 1.—Mixed hay 16 pounds, turnips or mangels 40 pounds, meal mixture composed of bran 6 parts, ground barley 2 parts, oil cake 1 part, and cotton meal 1 part. This meal fed at the rate of 1 lb. per 3 1-2 pounds of milk produced.

No. 2.—Mixed clover hay 12 pounds, corn ensilage 39 pounds, meal mixture composed of bran 5 parts, cotton seed 2 parts, oil cake 1 part, fed at the rate of 1 pound for every 3 or 3 1-2 pounds of milk produced.

All cows are not of the same temperament. On this account a study should be made of the requirements of the individual animal. In the best bred herds, cows vary in their productive ability, therefore to obtain the greatest profit, records should be kept of both milk and feed, and tests made occasionally to ascertain if it would pay to increase or decrease the grain.

Cows, in order to make a maximum production at a minimum cost, should be housed under the most favorable conditions, that is, in regard to cleanliness, good ventilation, plenty of light, with necessary bedding and occasional grooming.

A cow should have all good quality roughage she wants, with a well balanced grain ration regulated by her production, also plenty of fresh water and from one to three ounces of salt added to her feed daily.

Dr. S. Boulter Dies

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 7.—Dr. Samuel Boulter, V. S., died at his home here Saturday, aged fifty nine. Owing to ill health he returned from the front last spring, where he had been a surgeon in the British cavalry. He had for years been a member of the Board of Health and the City Council here, resigning in 1915 to go to the front. He was born in Haldimand county and came here a quarter of a century ago. He leaves a wife and one son, Clement, one of the Canadian "Original Pioneers" still at the front.

The late Dr. Boulter was well known in these parts having been raised in Walpole. He practised his profession in the village of Selkirk before moving to Niagara Falls. His wife is the daughter of the late J. P. Biggar, of this place.

Death of Mrs. H. Roberts

Word was received on Saturday last that the wife of Rev. Howard Roberts, M.A., B.D., pastor of Lundy's Lane Methodist church, Niagara Falls, and son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Roberts of this place, had passed away on Thursday, a victim of the Spanish influenza.

We understand that the unfortunate woman had been sick about a week and that before she died three doctors were in attendance.

The sympathy of the entire community goes out to Rev. Roberts and his two small children in the loss they have sustained.

The funeral was held on Monday to Fairview cemetery, Toronto.
