Though He Blamed Wife for Neglect.

Speaking at a dinner, Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, referred to the necessity of having a good memory, and fittingly related this story:

At eight o'clock in the morning one day last summer the Jones' took trunks, grips and suitcases, and hustled for the railroad station. Twenty minutes later a taxicab dashed up to the Jones house and out jumped Jones.

"What's the matter, old man?" asked a kindly disposed neighbor. "Forget your railroad ticket?"

"No," answered Jones, showing symptoms of peevishness. "My wife left a kettle of water boiling on the gas stove. Didn't think of it until we reached the station. You can always depend on a woman to have a memory like that."

So saying, Jones unlocked the door and hastened into the house. In about two minutes he came out again with his features puckered into a peculiar twist.

"How did you find it?" cheerfully asked the neighbor. "Sizzling to heat a locomotive, I suppose."

"No," guiltily answered Jones. "I had forgotten that I turned the gas off at the meter."

BOTHA'S COOL DARING.

His Nerve in Dealing With a Savage Zulu Chieftain.

A story of the cool daring of General Louis Botha, whose name is so intimately associated with dramatic episodes in the history of South Africa, appears in his biography written by Harold Spender. It happened one winter when young Botha had taken sheep for pasture across the Drakensberg mountains and down to the warmer coast lands, which were still in the grip of the Zulus.

One tranquil day a young native rushed into Botha's camp. He breathlessly warned the young Boer to fly and save his life. Mapelo was "out." The most bloodthirsty of all the ruffianly gangs that were then ravaging Zululand was the well mounted and well armed gang of Mapelo. Only an hour or two before, said the native, he had cut the throat of a missionary at the old mission station, about six miles from Botha's camp. The native himself had just left the body of the unhappy man lying still and warm on his own dining room table.

Both had little time to make up his mind, but one thing was clear—he could not desert his sheep. Most of them belonged to his neighbors. As he began to prepare to face the raiders. Looking at his bandolier, he found to his dismay that he had only one cartridge left. Scarcely had he discovered the fact when a troop of Zulu horsemen appeared about a quarter of a mile away over a rise of ground in extended order and charged toward the wagon, waving their rifles over their heads and shouting like demons possessed.

Louis Botha rose and very deliberately mounted the box seat of his wagon. He laid his rifle in a conspicuous place next him. Then he proceeded, with an outward calm very foreign to his own inner feelings, to light a match and apply it slowly to his pipe.

Throwing away the match and looking up, he found that the native horsemen had drawn rein in a cloud of dust within a few yards of the front of the wagon.

A few seconds of dead silence followed, the natives glancing at Botha and Botha eyeing them with a steady gaze of surprise. Then Mapelo advanced and said that his men were very hungry and wanted something to eat. Botha gravely demurred at this stormy way of approach and coolly bargained with the invader of his peace. At last he agreed to give them one sheep on the strict condition that they should withdraw some distance from his camp and not disturb him again. The condition was accepted, and so ended an incident that Botha has always described as one of the most disturbing in his whole life.

Stoking in a Battleship

Except for the actual life she receives from a wave, a battleship rolling in a beam sea moves a good deal like an inverted pendulum, so that one feels a minimum of motion when he is down against the skin of a lower berth, and a maximum in the foretop. The transition had been a sudden one for me that morning, for the gunnery lieutenant, who had been initiating me into the secrets of "director firing" in the foretop, brought me back to the main deck and turned me over to the senior engineer, who had volunteered to show me what roasting stoking was like, says Lewis B. Freeman in Popular Mechanics. We put one reeling steel ladder after another above us in our descent, the roll decreased as the tumult of crashing waves was stilled to muffled jolts, and with a flight or two still to go, we were steady enough on our feet to have both hands free to lift the heavy air-tight "flap" of the boiler room.

To one who has pictured the stoker as a gaunt-eyed demon steadily shoveling coal under a boiler for four hours, the first glimpse of the stokehold of a warship that is in not great hurry to get somewhere will come as a good deal of a surprise. The place is neither especially dirty nor especially hot. Neither the letting the coal slide down by its own weight from the encompassing bunkers, nor the cracking up of the occasional lumps which are too large for even combustion raises as much dust as the dumping of a single sack upon one of the upper decks. The running back of a sliding steel door brings a stream of coal running out of one of the bunkers, coal which, dumped from sacks into the entrance of a chute on one of the upper decks, has worked its way downward by gravity as that beneath it has been fed to the furnaces. This stream is caught in a "skip" of steel, shaped like the half of a cylinder and capable of holding something like a couple of hundredweight. Sliding fairly easily over the gridded deck—pushed by one man and pulled by another—the skip loads are dumped evenly along in front of the 12 doors which open—four to each—to the three furnaces under the boilers occupying this half of the stokehold. Now we come to the actual stoking.

A bell suddenly clangs, echoing sharply from the steel walls, and instantly two of the lounging figures quicken to the alert. One scoops up a shovelful of coal and the other steps forward and rests a hand on the lever which opens one of the furnace doors. A second or two later, as a number shows on a dial on the wall, the latter pushes the lever sharply, and the door is pressed upward, revealing a

SAVE THE CHILDREN

Mothers who keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house may feel that the lives of their little ones are reasonably safe during the hot weather. Stomach trouble, cholera infantum and diarrhoea carry off thousands of little ones every summer. In most cases because the mother does not have a safe medicine at hand to give promptly. Baby's Own Tablets cure these troubles, or if given occasionally to the well child will prevent their coming on. The Tablets are guaranteed by government analysis to be absolutely harmless even to the newborn babe. They are especially good in summer because they regulate the bowels and keep the stomach sweet and pure. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from Dr. T. C. PERSIA'S NATIONAL DRINK.

Sherbet is the Popular Beverage in That Thirsty Country.

The great beverage in Persia is sherbet, which is plentifully supplied and of which there are many varieties, from the bowl of water with a squeeze of lemon to the clear, concentrated juice of any sort of fruit to which water is added to dilute it.

The preparation of sherbet, which is done with the greatest care, is a very important point in so thirsty a country as Persia and one to which much time is devoted. It may be either expressed from the juice of fruit freshly gathered or from the preserved extract of pomegranates, cherries or dequons, mixed with sugar and submitted to a certain degree of heat to preserve it for winter consumption.

Another sherbet much drunk is called guzargoben. It is made from the honey of the tamarisk tree. This honey is not the work of the bee, but the product of a small insect or worm living in vast numbers under the leaves of the shrub. During the months of August and September the insects are collected and the honey is preserved. When used for sherbet it is mixed with vinegar, and although not so delicious as that made from fruit, it makes an excellent temperance beverage.

Only among the rich and fashionable are glasses used. In all other cases sherbet is served in china bowls and drunk from deep wooden spoons carved in pear wood.

The Russians undertake the great number of pilgrimages to the Holy Land. It is estimated that in normal times between twenty and forty thousand Russians visit Palestine every year.

The term "pocket handkerchief" is one of the queerest in our language. At first it meant kerchief (converber), a covering for the head carried in the hand, and at length pocket handkerchief, a covering for the head held in the hand and kept in the pocket.

The life of a man was saved in Australia by means of an operation performed by a native without proper instruments under the direction of a surgeon 1,800 miles away. The subject fell from his horse at Hall's Creek in Northern Australia and suffered serious injuries, including a rupture of the urethra. An operation was urgently necessary and there was no doctor within 1,000 miles. The condition of the patient was described by telegraph to a doctor in Perth, and he sent back, by the same means, instructions under which the postmaster at Hall's Creek with such surgical instruments as he could get, the chief of which was a razor, carried out the operation successfully.

Principles of Action.

There are five good principles of action to be adopted to benefit others without being lavish, to encourage labor without being harsh, to add to your resources without being covetous, to be dignified without being supercilious and to inspire awe without being austere.

HAS WON ITALY.

Prince of Wales Has "Made Good" in South.

While the censor was trying to keep a secret that the Prince of Wales had reached the Italian front the prince himself was making friends without knowing it in the war zone.

His simple manners at first astonished the Italians, though they might be used to their own king by now, who goes about like any other officer. But it took some time for the Italian officers and their men to understand that a certain young infantry captain was heir to the British throne.

At Mantua—where he stopped several days, busy with his troop till evening, when he would go to a movie—it was some time before citizens knew the Prince of Wales was in town. One afternoon he and two other officers dropped into what is called a "bar" here, that is a store where people can get coffee as well as liquors, but no wine. A gray-haired, rubicund, weather-beaten Lombard artillery captain, who was having a cup of coffee, saw the three English officers come in, went up to them, and, addressing the prince, said:

"Allow me, comrade, to offer you and your friends a cup of coffee, a modest sign of comradeship."

And he threw down a franc to the bartender, who forthwith handed England's future sovereign a 2-cent cup of coffee.

He does not know yet that he offered a cup of coffee to the Prince of Wales.

The first to recognize the prince in the zone of operations was a young lieutenant of a battalion of bersaglieri, who happened to have seen him pass on his way from Udine to the Italian king's villa in the spring of 1916.

"Soldiers!" cried the subaltern, "let us salute the Prince of Wales, who comes here to give us proof that England is Italy's friend in this dark hour!"

The whole battalion burst into "Long live the Prince of Wales! Long live England!"

The prince, who blushes very easily, got as red as a poppy, rose to his feet in the automobile which was taking him to the British lines, and cried in good Italian:

"The English soldiers are proud and happy to fight side by side with you brave Italian troops!"

He could not have said anything to please that weary battalion better. This was on the Saturday after those terrible days of Caporetto, when not only the army, but the entire nation was smarting under the pain of the second army's moment of weakness. And an officer who was there told the World correspondent that tears came into the eyes of his grim superiors as the Prince of Wales spoke those words, not of comfort, but of confidence and praise. It was what those weary, mud-covered, hungry men needed more than anything in the world just then. From that moment Prince Edward's popularity in this country was certain—Romans' special correspondence New York World.

UKRAINE BISONS.

Polish Cavaliers Killed Them in the Arena.

The Genoese in the Middle Ages and the Attic Greeks in the days of Socrates had commercial settlements in the Ukraine, but there was a time anterior to the latter when there were no human beings in that land. But there were millions upon millions of buffaloes, or, to be accurate, bisons. When hunters began to attack them it is not known, but they disappeared, all but a scanty remnant that escaped to the neighboring forests of Poland. These were at once taken under the protection of the Polish Kings of the Piast dynasty. The traffic in smoked and salted buffalo humps and tongues was a royal monopoly, and mighty castles filled with them left the port of Danzig for foreign lands. The Piasts, knowing how highly these delicacies were esteemed, sent them as presents known to be acceptable to other monarchs.

Besides this traffic there were royal buffalo hunts of a peculiar nature. A glade or open space in the woodland was chosen. Falcades were driven in around the circle of the glade and several rows of seats were built in a rustic fashion, forming a woodland amphitheatre. Some dozen or so of the fierce old males were driven by dogs and beaters and men with horns up to an enclosure connected with the amphitheatre. The Polish bull fight was unique. No permitted crossbow or firearms were permitted. A bull was driven into the enclosed space, and then at another point four knights and four nobles entered in single file.

The furious bison, emitted grunts of rage (for they were never known to bellow like the bulls of Bashan) made a rush at one mounted cavalier, who instantly fled before the beast. Up came another cavalier and pierced him with his lance. The bison turned upon him and instantly a third cavalier galloped up and pierced him, taking care not to kill. In turn every one gave him a lance thrust. When the bull was so weak that he could not charge he received the coup de grace. The spectators applauded and the quadrille filed out to give place to another set of four and another bison. The cavaliers were mounted on their finest chargers.

To have his horse wounded was considered the acme of disgrace, though to be wounded in person was a feather in the cap of the rider. The lance was always the national weapon of the Poles, and they had a distinctive breed of horses only a little larger than a polo pony and pure white. No one knows where these horses came from, but the Poles themselves came from the Ukraine and followed the buffaloes. The latter are no quite extinct, for there is a herd in the wood of Bielowicz numbering about a thousand. It belonged to the Czar, when there was a Czar, and it is now, it is to be presumed, the property of the Kaiser. Let us trust he will be merciful to his subject quadruped.

Measuring Distances.

Professor J. Joly, of Dublin, has suggested an ingenious method of measuring distances by wireless, says the Popular Science Monthly. He relies on the fact that disturbances travel with different speeds in different media. Sound travels 1,100 feet or more a second in air and about 1,700 feet a second in water, while wireless or light signals travel at equal speeds. Thus, if a shore station sends out these different signals at the same time, they will not be received by the ship simultaneously; there will be an interval of time between them that will increase as the distance of the ship from the shore increases. If a mile from the station, a ship would receive a sound signal in air 45 seconds later than a sound signal in water, and an air sound 55 seconds, or a sound in water 12 seconds, later than a wireless signal. Therefore, with a knowledge of the interval which elapses between the reception of any two of these different signals, it is a comparatively simple matter to calculate the source from which they have been sent. Knowledge of this method is all that is necessary.

Giant Jap. Plane.

A gigantic military aeroplane has just been finished at the Imperial Military Arsenal, Tokyo. It was chiefly designed by the late Lieutenant Saito, who met a tragic death at Tokyo. The machine has been a year and a half under construction, during which time vast improvement has been made in aerial navigation. This aeroplane is equipped with three 100-horsepower engines and is capable of maintaining 90 miles an hour for six hours, continuous flight. The wings are 21 metres long and 2½ metres wide. The machine will carry five passengers, several machine guns and a large stock of bombs. It is meant for attacking and attacking enemy planes and the grand military manoeuvres held in Shiga prefecture had special significance owing to the exhaustion and employment in sham battles of every new fighting apparatus introduced in European warfare during the past three years.
