England Speaks For Herself

HAVE before me a great pile of printed matter and photographic information which the British Pictorial Service and the newly formed Department of Commercial Intelligence are sending to the ends of the earth in the interests of the British Empire's side of the war.

What a healthy change this poetry represents from the first cautious months, when the authorities were afraid to let anything out for fear of "comfort to the enemy!"

In this article I wish to deal with the work of the Pictorial Service.

Thousands upon thousands of battle-front pictures have been taken, at sea and on land, and the photographers have dared anything and everything to get them.

There are four pictorial booklets—"The Sentinels of the Seas," "Carry On," "Behind the Lines," "Through Swamps and Forest." They are the first in a series, broadcast in all tongues.

There is a string of beautifully illustrated papers, portraying all phases of military activities, published for consumption in the East, near and far.

Among the extensive assortment of maps and diagram sheets here is a great chart showing

"WHAT GERMANY WANTS: HER CLAIMS AS SET FORTH BY LEADERS OF GERMAN THOUGHT."

The whole world is here laid out, on Mercator's projection, and the red spots are the would-be dominion of the Hun.

All South American is red, and most of Africa. The bloody trail is over Scandinavia and the whole of Central Europe, Turkey, Syria, China, the Dutch West Indies. One wonders at the moderation of the cartographer in leaving out the United States.

In the border of the chart there are thirty-six quotations giving the swollen vaticinations of Prussian imperialists.

"Holland, together with her royal family, her European possessions and her colonies in South America, the Indian Islands and Australasia, must become the all of Germany," writes Tannenbergh in "Gross Deutschland." Werner Sombart claims Dover, Malta, and Suez as stations for the German fleet.

General von Bernhardt lays stress upon the value of Denmark as commanding the approaches to the Baltic.

Ernest Hasse intends to absorb the Scandinavian countries.

The bold editor, Maximilian Harden, whose independence of thought has been admired even by his foes, talks of "German cannon on the routes to Egypt and India" as "worthy of great sacrifices."

Another portrays "The British Empire at War," giving the homes of the fighting men and the routes they have travelled to come to Britain's aid, and the part of the far-flung battle-line that they hold now.

The territory occupied by the Central powers outside their own borders adds up to 109,500 square miles. The territory held by the Allies outside their own borders adds up to 676,010 square miles.

There are also four-page pictorial sheets, such as "Bagdad in British Hands," "Haig's Smashing Blow in the West," and "The United States at War."

The latter presents on the front page the president's portrait. Above it in French, German, and English are his words:

"We are now about to accept gaze of battle with this national foe to liberty, and shall, if necessary, spend the whole force of the nation to check and nullify its pretensions and its power."

There is also a war atlas, bound appropriately in red cartridge paper, the maps made at Stanford's classic establishment. Poor Stanford died last spring, heart-broken over the loss of his son.

The foreword to the atlas explains: "This atlas has been designed to illustrate for the student not only the actual battle fronts but also some of the general aspects of the world war."

The first five maps show without comment the theaters of war in the West, in the East, on the Italian front, in the Balkans and in the Asiatic possessions in Turkey. The sixth map illustrates in greater detail the British front in the West, while the seventh shows the various theatres of war in which British troops are engaged and the vast distances which they have safely traveled under the protection of the British navy.

"The eighth map demonstrates the collapse of Germany's ambition in the East, and the ninth illustrates the vast extent of the possessions which she has lost overseas. The tenth map shows the isolation in which Germany has placed herself by her criminal outrages on civilization, and the eleventh explains, by chapter and verse, the claims to world domination which have been put forward by her leaders. The twelfth map illustrates the growth of the military domination of Prussia, while the thirteenth is an effective exposure of the professed desire of the Central powers for the 'free development' of other races.

"The last map shows how Germany, at the commencement of the fourth year of war, is gripped in a relentless vice of steel, and points to the final and decisive victory of Great Britain and her allies."—Pulleton S. Waldo in Detroit Free Press.

Ways of Raising Money

The return of spring comes to bring added elasticity to the feminine mind and in times of peace this impulse works itself out in spring house cleaning and doing the family sewing. This year, however, the "spring drive" at home concerns itself with contriving ingenious ways of raising money for various war charities. In England there is the present campaign for the benefit of the Red Cross. Every woman who possesses a pearl necklace is asked to donate at least one of the perfect pearls towards the making of an entirely new Red Cross necklace, which when sold, will add a "King's ransom" more or less to the funds of the British Red Cross. The chairmanship of the committee having this movement in charge is held by Princess Victoria. Queen Alexandra, Queen Mary, Princess Victoria and Princess Mary have already sent in their contribution of perfect gems and the "list of donors grows daily."

The idea of contributing a pearl was suggested by the Jewel Fund Campaign, the hands of titled English women who donated necklaces, tiaras and gems in various settings in order to raise a fund for providing model clinics for babies and mothers in England. The same impulse is taking a much more humble form in Canada and will, of course result in a smaller sum. Instead of pearls and jewels there is being inaugurated in many Canadian cities a "trinkets fund." Gold and silver is solidated and the idea is to secure the thousands of pieces which are out of date or have become useless except for the metal composing the pieces. Table silver and discarded jewelry make up the bulk of the contributions and these are melted and sold as metal.

Women in Edinburgh carried out a collection of this kind recently under the leadership of Lady Hunter. It was her idea to collect tin foil and "scrap" gold and silver but so many interesting contributions were received that it was decided to offer some for sale as they were received while other articles were repaired, and then offered for sale. From the idea of a small collection developed a store where articles of glass, china, books, pictures, old jewelry, bric-a-brac are on sale and find ready purchasers. The store has been in existence for six months and $500 have been sent in for Prisoners of War Fund.

Because the housewife long ago gave the name "white elephant" to expensive possessions which had no practical value the promoters of the sale of these objects decided to call their store the "White Elephant and Tin Eoil Shop." There is no expense attached to the enterprise as the store room is donated by the owner and all the helpers give their services free.

Although the "white elephant" sale is not new it enjoys almost perennial success and commends itself to communities where it has not been tried. There is no reason why it should not be conducted on the principles of the chain stores, the collection travelling from small village to small village and being augmented from a central depot where collections could be sent from long or short distances.
