("Seamark," in Sheffield, Eng., Independent.)

There are destroyers and-destroyers. Some are the advanced creations of the war, and as such are respected by the various units having dealings They sweeten the stomach, regulate with them; others are the pathetic "pride o' the navy" of yesterday.

The Bustler undoubtedly belonged to the second category; she was ridiculously mid-Victorian. She looked it as she lay in harbor; her very appearance was sheepish, self-depreciating. She had a captain—a real live "loot," but not so's you'd notice. He was the grubbiest of all the grubby denizens of the bridge; the "chattlest" of all the llama coats was his, and his gold at the hands of a big succession of coal ships. The crew called him "Bug3."

Now Bugs was a man of ideas. He belonged to the unattached division, so that his patrol courses took him mostly into pleasant waters, yet he longed for a stronger, a swifter command. He knew, moreover, that he must serve his apprenticeship on "the blamed hocker" to the full of his time. unless he could prove to the Brass Hats that he was worthy of a . . Then a-well, it looked like a dingy old tramp-loomed over the skyline and flickered something at her from a darkened lamp. Thereafter their courses ran parallel, but far apart. At half-past seven it happened. A tin fish caught the tramp in the forehead, but the bulkheads held, and the Bustler caught the submarine all over her with a salvo, and the bulkheads didn't hold. Leastways, they fished four survivors out of the oil natch. and that looks a bit suspicious, doesn't

"You? Tow me? Run away and play, little boy! Mother will miss you if you're out after dark."

Bustler's blood was up. However much Bugs might traduce his charge in his own wardroom, he wasn't going to stand by and hear it openly elandered by a Gentile. "Look here," said Bugs. "I'll have you remember that this destroyer is one of the little old boats that tucked old Tirpitz away in Kiel in the early days of the war, when you dear people were panicky for the nearest port. There's material in this hooker -she was built before the war. Now -if you've got a towing wire in that decrepit old packet of yours that will stand a ten-knot strain, sling it over, and not so much chin music. I have spoken.'

The wire came across, and wounded dignity and insulted impudence flounced away together-one looking for a dry dock, and the other hoping for a few hours' leave. And that's how we catch 'em-come

Eow Sugar Became a Necessity.

Man's enormous need for sugar is the result of the evolution of his diin the European forests of the ice age were able to digest cellulose and get the sugar out of it, as a goat or a camel does now. The organ which did this work was the fermiform appendix. Later, man began to get enough sugar by converting the starch in grains and fruits. Then he discovered the process of cooking, which makes much easier, and even in some cases performs the conversion. When sugar was discovered, it was at first regarded as a curiosity, Heligoland, and when we get there tell then served as a luxury, and finally became the necessity which it now is, as men's stomachs became accustomed to its use. Apropes of the pro-German propaganda which he has been carrying on in his own country, a story is being told concerning the son of the great Norwegian writer, Bjornsterne Bjornson, which as a bon mot, and quiet apart from the people concerned, is worth preserving. Young Bjornson, in the course of a voyage on an ocean steamship, had the temerity to intrude himself on the bridge. The captain was scandalized, as all captains would be, and requested the intruder to return at once to the deck. "Are you aware," said Bjornson, hotly, whom you aer speaking," and when the captain professed complete ignorance, added, "To the son of Norway's greatest poet." ## A Queer Building.

Of the many strange buildings and temples in the Far East, says a writer in the Wide World Magazine, there are none more wonderful than the four hundred and fifty temples of law at Mandalay, in Upper Burma, known as the Rutholdaw, or "Royal Merit." The group consists of a large central pagoda surrounded by Ain-shap-min, who ascended the throne on the death of his brother in 1867. The latter was cruelly murdered by his two nephews, and it appears that this very much affected the new king. Not only did he devote his energies to peace, but erected this strange group of temples. each one of which contained a slab on which is engraved a portion of the Buddhist Bible. These holy tablets this conversion of starches into sugar are made of soft marble or alabaster, each slab being about the size of a large, old-fashioned upright tombstone. On both sides are engraved chapters from the Buddhist scriptures. Over very slab is erected a canopy surmounted by a gilded framework of metal with small tinkling bells. The temples are situated in a beautiful wooded valley, and seen from the surrounding hills they present a fascinating picture.

TEST YOUR LUNGS.

A Simple Method by Which One May Measure His Development.

People often suffer from weak, undeveloped lungs without suspecting it. True, small, feeble lungs are usually associated with a small, narrow or sunken chest, but not invariably. By means of the misuse of physical culture it is possible to develop large chest muscles, thus acquiring a big chest measurement, while the lungs remain small and ill-nourished. Again, l'ung mischief is often so slow and insidious in its approach that the trouble is not discovered until it is firmly established. Here, however, is a simple test which will tell you whether your lungs are healthy or not:

Take as deep a breath as you can, and then, in a slow but distinct voice count from one onward as far as you of the filling may be varied in many can without taking in more breath. I ways.

The number of seconds you can continue counting is a pretty reliable index to the state of your lungs, so you should have some one to time you. If your lungs are sound and normally developed, your range will be be-Leon Trotzky, lately so prominent in tween twenty and thirty-five seconds. If your limit is between ten and twenty seconds there is no need to be alarmed; probably your lungs are merely in need of exercise, to be readily obtained by regular deep breathing in pure air. A range less than ten seconds, however, points to more or less mischief, and you should not delay in having your lungs examined by a medical man.
