Experimental Farm Notes

The plant pathologists of the Experimental Farm inform us that of the many destructive plant diseases, some are more difficult to control than those living over in the soil. Year after year notwithstanding the practice of crop rotation, the effect of soil infection often becomes pronounced as to cause what is popularly known as "soil sickness." One of the most notorious of these diseases is clover and alfalfa wilt (Sclerotinia) which has given rise to the belief that land may become clover sick. This disease has just begun to show up on the continent of America, and unless prompt precautionary measures are taken there is a possibility of the disease causing similar losses here to what it does in Europe.

A disease similar in nature attacks beans, and there are instances which call for a word of general advice on matters of prevention.

As soon as the crop is harvested, whether gathered in the field, garden or orchard, there is manifested a universal indifference and neglect on the part of some growers towards the condition in which the ground trees or bushes are left. Were it but known to them that with the refuse left on the ground from crops there exist exist myriads of germs of serious plant diseases (and also insect pests) ready for hibernation.

Mummified fruits left undisturbed either on the trees or on the ground, give rise to a new outbreak of brown rot in the spring. Ploughing under affords only limited protection, since it safely buries all fungus material which spring ploughing will bring to the surface of the soil once more after successful hibernation. Prevention, as usual, is decidedly better than cure, and sanitary measures are just as important in field, garden or orchard, as in stables and dwellings. As soon as possible after the harvest of each crop, or better, after the growing season is over, a general clean-up is most essential. Where possible, all refuse should be collected; diseased or rotten fruits, leaves, stalks, haulms, etc., should be gathered and the whole destroyed by fire. Material that will not burn readily, such as is common on the fields after harvesting—roots, potatoes, etc., should be buried in a pit. In orchards, where such measures are followed by the usual dormant sprays, the results will be most beneficial, and field and garden crops will also greatly benefit.

National Thrift Notes

Save for Victory.
To save is the easiest of practices—if you have the will.
Pinch your expenditure a little and you'll find it will pay.
A dollar saved is a dollar earned.
Save to lend to your country when it calls.
The will that saves is the will that wins.
Saving will provide both an umbrella and a mackinac for the "rainy day."
Saving money is often the expressive of saving grace.
Save to make Canada secure.
A man who is hovering on the verge of want is not his own master.
Save to save—both yourself and Canada.
Live within your means and you means will be increased.
If you don't live within your means you must live on the means of others.
The first dollar saved is often the first step on the road to affluence.
Heaven helps those who help themselves. Moral—Save.
Don't be a victim of circumstance: help to shape circumstance by saving.
Sacrifice a present pleasure for a future good.—Save.
Save, remembering that to him that hath shall be given.
Saving carries its own reward—with interest.
Carnegie's chief asset in beginning life was his "saving" quality.
