SIR WILLIAM'S WILL

Jack had written a renunciation, and dated it thirteen months after his father's death. The old lawyer nodded. "Very clever, Sir William; very clever; but He advanced to the fire with the paper in his hand.

"You appear very determined to cut your own throat," he said. "And I am determined to prevent you—both of you—if I can. Please remember, Sir William, that I was your father's solicitor, and the Bramleys, I have an honorable obligation to live up to. In a word, you've got to do my duty, and, if possible, save two exceedingly foolish young persons from making a miserable hash of their lives.

"You are spared the temptation," said Mr. Granger, dryly. "Sir William guarded against that; he especially barred any compromise. No, it is marriage—or nothing."

"It's nothing, as far as I am concerned," said Jack. "I'm sorry you have been so badly, sorry that my father should worry you, but—think I'll be going off. The least I can do for you is to take myself off."

"One moment," said Mr. Granger. As he spoke, he laid on the table the renunciation, which in his absorption he had folded, so that it looked like an ordinary letter that had been slipped in an envelope. "As your legal adviser—I suppose I am, Sir William, thank you. May I ask what means you possess?"

"I should like to have seen it; but I wouldn't have induced me to change my mind," said Jack. "And, I say, don't let me see about the matter any longer. I shall leave Bramley as long as I can, and I'm sorry to say I'm not going to be any more of a nuisance to you."

Clylie, it is because you 'worrit' so; and I think it is disgustingly selfish of you.

"That's it!" he said. "Yes, that's it. He changed his mind while I was out of the room, and took up the thing—he snatched at the waste-paper basket, but there were no fragments of the paper there—or burned it. He was not there. He turned over the various papers and documents; but he could not find the one by which Sir William had given away a large estate and a vast fortune; he had stood staring vacuously at the paper on the table on which he had dropped it."

GERMANY AND JAPAN

Viscount Kato Details Some of His Experiences

Viscount Kato, the veteran Japanese diplomat, who was Foreign Minister when war broke out, has made some interesting disclosures of German treachery and duplicity at an informal political dinner, attended by many influential Japanese statesmen.

Referring to the triple interference at the end of the China-Japan war, which he had no doubt was of German origin, Viscount Kato said at that time he was Ambassador in London, and saw the cartoon of the "Yellow Peril," which the Kaiser had drawn to destroy Japan's honor in the eyes of the world.

"A short time before the triple interference was announced," continued the Japanese statesman, "the German Ambassador in London asked me for an interview, so I called to see him. He made some lame attempt to justify Germany's heinous conduct. He said Germany was interfering in the interest of Japan, for if she stood aloof Russia and France would make more exorbitant demands, and he asked me to convey that message to my Government at home."

"I was young, being only 24, so that I could not repress my indignation at his contemptuous proposition, and said I would do nothing of the kind, reminding him that if the German Government had any communication to make to Japan on the matter it should be made through the Japanese Minister at Berlin, or the German Minister at Tokio."

"Then he had the impudence to say: 'You are a young man yet, and ought to read the history of European diplomacy.' I retorted that whether I read the book or not was my own affair, that it did not require old age to see that Germany's conduct in that case was an unexcusable and unwarrantable interference, and that I could not convey to my Government a message which was made in such an irregular manner."

"Later, when the Kaiser paid a visit to the Court of St. James' a great banquet was given in the royal palace, to which all representatives of foreign nations were invited. There were cordial greetings all round; but the Kaiser, while courteous to the others, gave me the cold shoulder and left the chamber without taking any notice of me."

"It is quite fresh in my memory," said Viscount Kato, "that soon his departure from Yokohama, after the commencement of hostilities between Japan and Germany, Count Bax, the German Ambassador to Tokio, refused to shake hands with Secretary Yoshida, who had gone to the pier to give him a send-off, and had the rudeness to say to him, 'Germany will never forgive you, Japan.'"

"All this well typifies the German business and treachery, and we can congratulate ourselves, not only for Japan, but for the whole world, that fate has recoiled upon Germany's own head, and that the intrigues which she had so heathenly thrown broadcast upon the rest of the world."

committee had the power to say: 'That is a way out for six others; you must all make the attempt in three days' time, and their word was law. In this way obviously impossible schemes were brought to light and vetoed, both in the interest of the officer contemplating flight and his comrades remaining in prison.

"The officer told the committee he had contrived an improvised parachute out of a big umbrella, and he wanted to jump with it close to a highway and float down into the road. But the committee said 'No!'

"One of the big escape inventions brought before the committee was a chute made of a long dinner table with a slippery polished top. This was let down from a window of the prison and on it officers were able to slide down and drop into the road outside."

ONLY COLD TEA. An impressive entry in the influence-of-mind-over-mystery contest is submitted by the Flushing correspondent. A prominent turner of an honest penny of Flushing, it seems with many a sly, knowing and suggestive wink passed the word about that he was now in a position to supply prominent residents of that legal dry district with what he with an air of infinite facetiousness denominated cold tea, to be drunk on the premises.

Prominent rakes of Flushing thronged to the premises at once, a thriving business soon was built up and many a lip was smacked and many a genial jest was exchanged over the so-called cold tea, the consensus of the best opinion being that our turner of an honest penny must have procured for his patrons the private stock of some old Kentucky cellar. Finally one day there came along a phlegmatic, unimaginative fellow who ordered a beaker of cold tea in the accepted important but servative manner, started to quaff and laid down the tippie with something. "Why, that's nothing but cold tea," he exclaimed with kindling anger.

Our turner of an honest penny frankly acknowledged that such a very sooth was the fact that had been the fact in very since the 'ception of his little venture, smilingly reminding all present that he could not offer them anything but cold tea, or sold them the beverage under any other name.

Our prominent rakes of Flushing, satisfied that they had been put upon and yet had no recourse, dispersed in no little content, thoroughly humiliated, chagrined and ashamed. For such is human nature, because they had been trapped into betraying their unfamiliarity with what it would have served them ill to know—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Heals Inflammation Stops Catarrhal Discharge Cures Colds Quickly. Poor remedies have given Catarrh the reputation of being incurable. But it is curable, easily and quickly, if the right method is employed. Stuffing a powder or ointment up the nose won't cure Catarrh, neither will tablets, douching or stomach medicines. These treatments fail because they only affect local conditions, they do not remove the cause, which is germ life established in the lungs, bronchial tubes, and nasal passages. Ordinary remedies do not reach these remote parts, but Catarrhzone does, for it is breathed through an inhaler into every air cell in the lungs, into every air passage in the head and throat. No matter where the Catarrh is Catarrhzone will reach it. It kills the germs, heals sore spots, clears the nose and throat instantly. Universally used; pleasant and clean; guaranteed to cure or money refunded.
