Stories of -Prince's Trip

E Canadian detective who travelled through Canada with the Prince of Wales, writes: "There isn't a better natured chap in the world, I'm sure, but he is shy, like his father is still, grandfather, whom I knew pretty the ravages and terror

"But if he takes after his father in some things, he resembles his grandfather in others, and has a quick eye for the pretty girls in Canada. During a function at New Brunswick His Royal Highness was standing alone for a moment waiting for his suits. hen he saw a young girl looking as m yery shyly, but with admiring eyes. By jove, he said, 'that's a pretty girl! Who is she?'

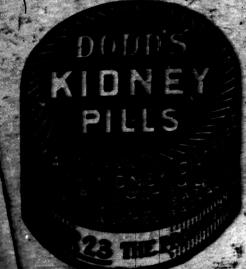

"I happened to know that she was the daughter of a prominent police official in the district. I will send for her in a minute," said the Prince I am sure she wants to speak to me but is afraid because I am a Prince. "A few minutes later his suite came along. He told one of his staff that he wished to know the young lady. One of them protested that she was not down on the list of presentations. Then I say the Prince really angry. I wish that lady to be presented to me, he said in a way that reminded me of his grandfather.

There was no further argument. "The staff officer departed and a few moments later the girl was ught before the Prince. But it the Prince now who was shy! e maid was quite self-possessed. and she spoke to the Prince for fully ten minutes, while other high-born emes were kept waiting.

"Not much has been said about the Prince's shooting and sporting peditions while he was here. He is a first-class angler, and I have seen him land some fish with true skill and udgment. Once on such an expedi-ion the Prince was fishing in a quiet spot, such as fishermen love, and where there was absolutely no need for my services. However, I was de-tailed to remain on hand, and did so. "All at once I heard a clear young e raised in angry tones.

"You are clumey. Couldn't you se me coming round the bend? Now rou've fouled my line and I shall lose he finh and half my tackie.

"I knew there was only one gentlefishing at that spot—my royal ree. So I strolled quietly along se who had had the cheek to talk whim in that fashion. I saw a hand-some girt, of charming figure, with dark flashing eyes, standing near the Prince, and looking angrily at him,

"Of course she remembered then that the Prince was flating in the feighborhood. Her face went red and then white. 'Oh, what will hapen? What shall I do?' she cried. "'Well,' I said, 'if you take my adice, you will so hack and have

"I didn't think she would have the nerve to do it. But she was a true British girl, and back she went, hough I could see it cost her something to do it. Your Royal Highness, she stammered amid her blushes. I did not know you were and I am so sorry and ashamed I was

"The Prince just laughed and said:
You're quite right: I was clumsy.
And here, he picked up his rod.
Will you take my rod in exchange for your lost tackle. Do! I'd like you

"Covered with confusion that girl took the rod. The Prince held out his hand. Then the girl did the prettlest thing I have ever seen. She dropped gracefully on one knee, and like a lady of the Court in days of old, raised the Prince's hand to her dainty lips. And the Prince, blushing furiously very gallantly put out his other hand and raised her to her feet. Then like a wild thing she scampered off, and was soon lost in the woods."

The Cruel Schoolmaster

An indignant mother wrote thus to the principal of an academy:

Dear Sir—My sou writes me that he has to study foo hard. He says he has to translate fifty hexameters of Latin a day. I looked "hexameter" up in the dictionary and find it is a poetic verse of six feet. Now, that makes 300 feet, or 100 yards of poetry for my poor son to translate each for my poor son to translate each day. I think about half an hexameter or six inches of this Latin is enough for a boy of his age. Yours truly,

At that time it was not considered suitable to make the "hop-off" although, of course, to the conditions, an independent start could be made at any time without the knowledge of the other competitor. Stout's opponent, who was determined to gain the rabbit and the prize, started out by a circultous route in order to be a less conspicuous target to the enemy's fire, finally arrived within a few yards from the scene, when to Flag Signalling at Sea.

"Probably most persons outside those immediately concerned with shipping would plead guilty to the impression that signalling at sea con-sists in the display of a few flags by day and a few lights by night, with possibly a wireless telegraphy system to fall back upon in case of disaster or other unforseen occurrence. Sea signalling," writes R. A. Fletcher. in the Windsor Magazine, "consists of all this and much more. It is admitted that there is no system which covers all the necessities of signalling at sea, but the statement is accurate that signalling between ships or between ships and shore embraces a large number of systems, every one of which has been designed to meet special circumstances and conditions which could not be met by any one of the other systems, and that safety ses is inseparable from signalling.

"Unfortunately all these systems are not employed on all big steamers, even passenger vessels lacking some of them, and until their adoption be made compulsory it is to be feared that owners will be found. who, for economy's sake, will run their vessels with fewer precautionary measures than they migh thave, and will cover their possible losses by insurance. Spinning a Web.

A patient Englishman, who last summer watched a garden spider spin its nest from start to finish, has told what he saw in Knowledge. At half past 9 o'clock in the evening the spider, a half grown female began work by dropping from one branch of a pine tree to another below and there making fast a line, which eventually formed two of the perpendicular radiating lines of the web. From that time it continued to work without interruption until twenty-five minutes after 1 the next morning. The network and the radial lines were done by half past 12, and the spiral part of the web was consequently made in less than an hour. He says the finished web was one of the most perfect he has ever seen.

Jumbo.

Jumbo was seen by Sir Samuel Baker, the famous African traveller. in 1861. The elephant, which was then only about four feet high, was in the possession of some Arabs who in turn sold him to the Jardin des Plantes, in Paris. In 1865 Jumbo was sold to the London Zoological Society, where he soon became a great favorite. Every day he was brought out in the gardens and exercised with load of boys and girls on his back. At last it was rumored that he had developed a bad temper, and his keepers were afraid that he would injure somebody. When P. T. Barnum heard this he offered $10,000 for Jumbo. The offer was accepted. When the sale became known a Were Got Originally From Beasts great outery was raised in London. the newspapers and the public protesting against it. Offers were made to buy Jumbo back, but Mr. Barnum insisted upon taking him to the United States. In 1882 Jumbo arrived in New York and was dragged through Broadway in a great box to which were attached sixteen houres. He continued to be an attraction of the Barnum Circus until Sept. 13, 1885, when he was put out of existence by a freight train at St. Thomas, Ont. He was crossing the track when the engine struck him, and he survived his wounds only fifteen minutes. He was about 26 years old when killed, and was not thought to have attained his full size. He was then eleven feet two inches high at the shoulders and weighed six and one-half tons. His trunk was seven feet four inches long, and his tusks one foot three and one-half inches in circumference.

Even if the story were true, there would be nothing new in it. Men have been killed before because they boasted of possessing the philosopher's stone. Wasn't it Tiberius Caesar who dashed out the brains of an all-too-clever mechanic who declared that he had accomplished the miracle of making malleable glass? Unbreakable class has had a strange fascination for the inventors of all ages. It has been almost as great a desireratum as transmuting iron and pig le. d into raw gold. Old Friar Bacon put the feat of making malleable glass in the forefront of the ist of wonders to be accomplished by his great elixir. Our esteemed chronicler Harrison, who was interested in all things, and whom nothing escaped. comments thus upon the fascinating problem: "If the philosopher's stone were once found, and one part thereof mixed with forty parts of molten glass, it would induce such a metallic toughness thercunto that a fail should nothing hurt it in such a manner."

So far the philosopher's stone has eluded the avaricious grasp of man, though time and time again has it been announced that somebody or other has discovered a process of transmuting the baser metals into precious ore. But in spite of these announcements the tranquility of our financial remains undicurbed. And from time to time there are reports in the papers of the secrets of malleable glass having at last been discovered. Only the other day a news despatch from Bridgeport, Conn., announced the discovery of a glass with this "metallic toughness." But I dare say that this grand desideratum is no nearer fulfilment than it was in Friar Bacon's time or in Canon Harrison's day. As for the story of the man who was shot in India for having found the philosopher's stone. I am inclined to believe that it was an old, old story in the days when Cyrus the Great was spreading his peculiar kultur throughout the eastern world. Doubtless if we were to excavate copies of the Thebes Herald or the Memphis Gazette, we should find therein that Ptolemy, or some other Egypt'an kaiser had executed scores of magicians for daring to upset the financial system of Egypt by turning copper and iron into gold. It's an old world, and in it there is nothing new under the sun.
