Weimar Is Hun Refuge

An ancient city of refuge for ideals is Weimar, the little capital of the Grand Duchy of Sax-Weimar, where the first German Assembly of the new democracy is being held. The German Athens it was called when Germany truly revered art and letters and ages, and though its glories began to fade as a citadel of culture when Goethe died in 1828 it has held out all these years against the epurated culture of the Hun.

A shelter for republicanism it was when its fame was spreading through the literary world, and when in 1870 the conquest of France had been accomplished the victor's song was heard, not in Weimar, but in Berlin. The capitalist of Prussia may lose its influence in German affairs if Germany truly repents; storied Weimar of the Golden Age may prevail once more.

The time of a thousand years endures the venerable city founded in the ninth century; her streets are plain to shabbiness, and yet there is within her gates the soul that should have dominated Germany. Weimar gave the world philosophers, poets and dramatists. Berlin gave Prussia war lords and hunkers.

The making of a constitution for Germany in such an environment as Weimar may mean much to the future. It is certain that the thought of a new government coming into being in Weimar at this late date is still abhorrent to Berlin.

The Grand Duke Karl August, despite his patrician ways, was at heart a democrat. His palace even in the early part of the nineteenth century was a very plain one, and often he sold jewels and other precious belongings that he might help author, poet or musician. Compared with Wilhelm II Hohenzollern he would have been classed as a true republican, although he did join the Prussian army. As a statesman he was far ahead of his time and even came near bringing about a form of constitutional government in his duchy.

His counsellors were men of lofty motives and broad views. The old Germany was scandalized when he called to sit with him in the management of public matters men not of nobis birth, although one of them was Goethe.

We think always of the author of "Faust" when Weimar is mentioned, and yet in these days the sponsors for the young German democracy draw more inspiration from a shabby little house up a side street than from the classic structure where Goethe dwelt. Plain almost to meanness is the other house where Schiller dwelt, as it appears to-day, still attesting as it does his poverty, and yet it seems as some sacred fan to those who hope for Germany.

Schiller was a rebel against military. His genius was all but crushed by the relentless rule of the military school where he was sent as a boy. The Prussian idea was to him the epitome of lawless cruelty.

Driven from his native province by a ruler who forbade him to write poetry any more, Schiller found at last in Weimar a haven among congenial souls. It mattered not to them that he had pilloried Teutonic tyranny in his "Wilhelm Tell," or that he had violently attacked aristocracy in "The Robbers."

By far the happiest years of Schiller's life were spent in the German Athens. Carlyle tells of the first visit of Schiller in 1777 to Weimar. The poets Herder and Wieland received him with cordial welcome and, with Wieland, nestor of German letters, he soon formed a friendly intimacy.

"You know the men," he wrote, "of whom Germany is proud; a Herder, a Wieland with their brethren; and one will now enclose me and them. What excellencies are in Weimar! In this city at least in this territory, I mean to settle for life, and at length once more to get a country."

Goethe was in Italy when Schiller first went to Weimar, but on his return the two poets became warm friends and their friendship is linked with the name of the city itself. The literary circle formed about them. Together in bronze they stand to this day in a public square at Weimar—the Goethe-Schiller monument.

The memory of the twain is suggested at every turn in the old town. The National Goethe Museum recalls them with many precious relics.

In Weimar music also found a haven. Here dwelt Franz Liszt, the great pianist and composer, and to him, horken, discouraged because Germany did not understand him, went Wagner. The incomparable chamber music of Bach was heard for the first time in the ducal palace.

The court theatre of Weimar, famed in dramatic art, was the home of Cornea Schroter and other talented players. Here dramas of Goethe and of Schiller had their first productions.

The more one goes back into the history of Weimar the more does the influence of the city become evident. One landmark is the old city church, built centuries ago, from the height of which Martin Luther cried out against the selling of indulgences. Here is his portrait, painted by Cranach. Near the altar is a painting of the Crucifixion, from the brush of Cranach the elder, and in it appear likenesses of Luther and Melancthon. The impression of the militant priest, who did so much to form the German language and to give ideals to the Germany of old, may still be detected.

The German people, therefore, in going back to Weimar may be in the first stages of their pilgrimage from a land of tyranny and materialism to one of freedom and ideal.

STORED FROZEN MEAT.

Germany Mobilized All Refrigerating Plants.

Berlin has 2,200 tons of frozen meat in its municipal cold storage depots. The supply is replenished from time to time so that it remains at its own level. On their present meat ration of one-half pound, the Vossische Zeitung says, the Berliners are assured of meat enough to last all Greater Berlin two or three weeks, even if there should be a temporary stoppage of replenishments.

How the cold storage of pork has helped Germany to "stick it" is explained in an article in the "Chemiker Zeitung." Early in the war, realizing the serious effect of the British blockade on the meat supply, the government directed the refrigerating industry to mobilize its resources on the largest possible scale. It was ordered to make preparations for dealing with millions instead of thousands of pigs. Cold storage plants were enlarged, new ones built, and the system so extended that to-day there is hardly a local community without its own refrigerating facilities.

City fortresses has a freezing plant of its own. In case of siege it will assist materially in the preservation of perishable foods, especially meat, eggs, fish and butter.

"The German authorities," says the article, "have taken advantage of cold storage to the fullest extent, thereby greatly easing the economic conduct of the war."

Its Spinning Revives Old English Industry.

To most persons the spinning and knitting of dog's wool seems to be an outgrowth of the necessities of this war. But it appears that twenty years ago Princess Victoria had the combings of her pet brown spaniel spun into yarn by the Sandringham Village Industry and the princess herself knitted the wool into a brown shawl for herself. It was at Sandringham also that the first Borsari wool was spun, King Edward making the suggestion and clipping the first sample from his famous Borsari Alex for the test.

Twenty years before that the hair of St. Bernard's was knitted into mittens and mufflers and ten years earlier poodle's wool was spun and woven into cloth that is to-day as good as when first made up although the cap has been worn ever since. A waistcoat knitted from the wool of skye terriers has been worn constantly for two winters and shows no sign of its service. Even the hair of Persian cats has been spun into the loveliest wool by the British Dogs' Wool Association. The wire-haired dogs have proven themselves real workers, also, for their combings make ideal filling for pillows for wounded limbs.

There is every prospect that the spinning of dogs' wool can and will be developed as a national handicraft since much of the spinning can be done in country homes and no doubt in these same places there will develop some interesting work in weaving and knitting. One very important consideration is the fact that the yarn is practically indestructible and of a lightweight texture, thus giving every encouragement to careful designing of patterns in weaving.

TOOK GREAT CARE.

Dickens' Letter Reveals Secret of Success.

In a recent sale of Dickens' autographs in London this letter, written while he was in the United States, appears:

"I should never have made any success in life if I had been shy of taking pains, or if I had not bestowed upon the least thing I have ever undertaken, exactly the same attention and care that I have bestowed upon the greatest. Do everything at your best. It learned every word of my Readings, and from ten years ago till last night I have never read to an audience but I have watched for an opportunity of striking out or inserting something where. Look at such of my manuscripts as are in the library at Gads' and think of the patient hours devoted year after year to single lines. The weather is very severe here, and the work is very hard. Dolby (his manager) having been violently pitched into by the mayor of New Haven (a town at which I am to read next week) has gone off boldly this morning with defiant written instructions that if he fall to make out his case he taken, and to tell him that I will not set foot in his jurisdiction, whereupon the New Haven people will probably fall upon the mayor in his turn and lead him a pleasant life."

RIGHT OF ENGARY.

A Lesson in Derivation Appropos of the Dutch Ship Seizure.

In the romance of words or the picturesque of their origin few are found more attractive than the word engary, which has come to the front in connection with the seizure of Dutch ships. When, to-day, one speaks of the "right of engary," or Lex angaria, or Jus angariae, or the "Droit d'angarie" of the French, one is simply employing a modified form of the Greek word agareia, adapted from the Persian, and, in its turn, obtained from a Babylonian expression. It referred to the office of an aggaros, a royal courier, an office first established, as far as records go, in the days of the Persian Cyrus the Great, 550 years before the Christian era. The aggaros of those times has his "King's messenger," attached to the Foreign Office, whose duty it is to carry despatches of a confidential nature to foreign courts. The Persian couriers, like the King's messenger of former days, were mounted, and constituted a kind of royal postal system. They were called upon to carry the imperial despatches to disor to prevent seizure by the enemy for the same purpose. Many abuses in and have given rise to litigation in the higher courts of various countries. Consequently the Peace Convention of The Hague, in 1899, tried to meet the need for regulating rights of angary, and adopted provisions whereby railways, plants, telegraphs, telephones, "steamers" and other ships, though belonging to companies or private persons, may be seized for military purposes, but must be paid for loss or damage.

Nobody Works But Father at Spawning Time.

In the bass family nobody works but father, according to authorities on fish. A decorated postcard has been mailed to many fishermen asking their help for father bass in their onerous domestic duties by refraining from fishing over the spawning beds.

The card shows a picture of a male bass guarding his nest. At the top of the card, as a motto for his faithfulness, are printed the lines:

"Nobody works but father—He's on guard all day; Fins in constant motion, Keeping the foes away."

According to the printed matter on the card, "in the bass family the male selects a nesting place and then seeks and escorts of it a mate. From 3,000 to 10,000 eggs are laid, after which the mother bass is driven away, never to return or to know her progeny."

"Father bass takes a position immediately over the nest, constantly fanning it with his fins and ever watchful for intruders. This vigil continues for ten days to two weeks, while the eggs are developing, and while the young are getting ready to try their fins. Woe unto the sucker or other enemy which appears too near to the nest. The faithful paternal guardian to rip it open with his dor-

Paper Underclothing.

Underclothing made of finely crimped or grained paper is manufactured in Japan. After the paper has been cut to a pattern the different parts are sewn together and hemmed, and the places where the buttonholes are to be formed are strengthened with calico or linen. The paper is very strong and at the same time very flexible. After a garment has been worn a few hours it will interfere with the perspiration that the body no more than do garments made of cotton fabric. The paper is not sized, nor is it impermeable. After becoming wet the paper is difficult to tear. When an endeavor is made to tear it by hand it presents almost as much resistance as the thin skin for making gloves.

WHEN BABY IS CROSS

Mothers, when your baby is cross—when he cries a great deal and no amount of attention or petting cheers him up—something is the matter. It is not the nature of the little ones to be cross and peevish—the well child is a happy child. Give him a dose of Baby's Own Tablets and he will soon be well again. They are a mild but thorough laxative; regulate the bowels and stomach; banish constipation and indigestion; break up colds and simple fevers; in fact they cure all the minor ailments of the little ones. Concerning them Mrs. Alphonse Lachance, St. Apolline, Que., writes: "My baby cried continually but Baby's Own Tablets soon set her right and now she is fat and happy." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Leonardo da Vinci Amazes Surgeons.

Though written four hundred years ago, Leonardo da Vinci's book on anatomy has only recently been published, and surgeons are only now discovering the marvels it contains.

Lecturing recently on it in London, Prof. William Wright pointed out that when it was written the circulation of the blood, osmosis, oxygen and the microscope were all unknown. All doctors believed that the arteries were full of fire and that the blood was situated in the heart. The interior arrangement of the heart was also misunderstood.

But Leonardo denied that air entered the heart, and wrote that the blood was "refreshed" in the lungs; he described accurately the anatomy of the heart and large blood vessels and the action of the muscles of the chest and abdomen in respiration.

THE BASS FAMILY.

Nobody Works But Father at Spawning Time.

In the bass family nobody works but father, according to authorities on fish. A decorated postcard has been mailed to many fishermen asking their help for father bass in their onerous domestic duties by refraining from fishing over the spawning beds.

The card shows a picture of a male bass guarding his nest. At the top of the card, as a motto for his faithfulness, are printed the lines:

"Nobody works but father—He's on guard all day; Fins in constant motion, Keeping the foes away."

According to the printed matter on the card, "in the bass family the male selects a nesting place and then seeks and escorts of it a mate. From 3,000 to 10,000 eggs are laid, after which the mother bass is driven away, never to return or to know her progeny."

"Father bass takes a position immediately over the nest, constantly fanning it with his fins and ever watchful for intruders. This vigil continues for ten days to two weeks, while the eggs are developing, and while the young are getting ready to try their fins. Woe unto the sucker or other enemy which appears too near to the nest. The faithful paternal guardian to rip it open with his dor-
