The Improvement of Tomatoes by Selection

(Experimental Farm Notes)
IMPORTANCE OF GOOD SEED—In all northern districts, where the season is barely long enough for a good heat-loving plant such as the tomato, true seed to name is a very important consideration, because most fruits will not mature and the grower will lose his time, if, accidentally or otherwise, seed of a late variety is sold for that of an early one.

SOME COMMERCIAL SEED UNRELIABLE—A great many of the best growers now save their own seed, as they know there are large quantities on the market which come from canning and canning factories where it is simply separated by machines. The mere fact that most seedsmen will not guarantee what they sell shows that the commercial article cannot very well be relied upon.

WHAT TO SELECT FOR—First of all, it must be remembered that tomatoes cross, so that only one variety can be grown. Theoretically, a person should select tomatoes for extreme earliness, great productiveness, bright red color, large size and high quality. But as there is no such a thing as an all round perfect strain, it is better in practice, to breed for one thing at a time. It is also no use to work for contradictory attributes; for instance, when the size of fruits is larger there are generally fewer in a cluster, though the total yield may be greater.

PLANT AND NOT FRUIT IS THE UNIT—It should always be remembered that attention must be directed towards the whole plant and not only to a part of it. Thus, it is a mistake, in selecting for earliness, to save seed from a plant which bore one very early fruit whilst the others were rather late in maturing; what should be done is to save seed from a plant having the largest number of fruits maturing early enough for the locality where grown.

WORK DONE AT CAP ROUGE—A few strains were isolated at Cap Rouge for yield, in certain cases, and for earliness in others. A selection of Prosperity from Bolgiano 1914 stock produced 20% more, in 1917, after three years work, than seed brought from this firm that year; a selection of Sunybrook Earliana from Europe 1914 stock produced 46% in 1917, after three years work, than seed brought from this firm that year; a selection of Danish Export from Wibolt 1914 stock matured fruit in 135 days, in 1915, whilst seed from this firm took 140 days; a selection of Bonny Best from Harris 1911 stock matured fruit in 163 days, in 1915, whilst seed from this firm took 167 days.

Free distribution to interested parties—Strains of Earliana have been specially selected at Experimental Station, Cap Rouge, Que., since 1911, and a limited quantity of choice seed is distributed free to interested parties who apply to the undersigned.

GUS. LANGELIER Supt. Experimental Station, Cap Rouge, Que.

Tile Drain Your Land It Pays

(Experimental Farms Note.)
On the Illustration Station at Stanbridge East, which Station is owned and operated by Mr. Charles S. Moore, very interesting and profitable results have been obtained. At this Station, two four-year rotation are being carried on, one on land which is fairly well tile drained, the other on land adjoining, with good surface drainage, only narrow lands being ploughed and the furrows kept clear. The soil is similar in character on both areas.
In 1918, Banner oats were sown on both fields. Those sown on the tile drained land were sown much earlier than those on the undrained land and yielded 55 bushels per acre, costing 36 3-4c per bushel.
