SWEET ODORS CAME FIRST FROM THE EAST

Perfume Industry Was Developed First by the Persians and Still Flourishes in the Orient.

According to competent authority, the perfume industry was developed first of all in Persia.

The Israelites, during their sojourn in Egypt, adopted the use of aromatic substances, primarily for religious purposes.

The Persians and Egyptians, of old peoples, were most keenly aware of the power and beauty of the most exquisite perfumes.

In the Middle Ages the Arabs, Venetians, Genoese and Florentines became famous for the preparation of sweet-smelling essences.

In the sacred temples of the East we find the wondrous incense burning upon the altars of the gods.

There are artists in the production of rare perfumes just as there are artists in most lines of human endeavor.

The man mentioned travelled for years in India, Siam, Japan and many other countries of the East.

Burma is one of the largest markets for these scents. The sale of perfumes in that country exceeds that in any American city.

Omelettes

In preparing a plain omelet (one without the addition of other ingredients or any filling) three eggs should be allowed for three persons.

Be sure that your omelet pan is scrupulously clean, and that the heat over which the omelet is cooked is very moderate.

The great caravan which every year sets out from Cairo for Mecca has a conductor on a camel leading the way.

WELSH RABBIT OMELET. This is particularly good for supper on a damp, chilly evening.

OMeLET AUX FINES HERBES. Beat the yolks of the eggs and add two tablespoonfuls of very finely minced parsley.

More recent recipes are: Superior—Stir together one-half cup of butter, one-half cup of brown sugar, one cup of unsifted flour.

Two lemons, one orange, one quart water, six slices pineapple, 3-4 cup sugar, ice.

GINGERBREAD

Can you make gingerbread? So many good cooks never think of making it, for they consider it too commonplace or ordinary.

It even gave its name to the hero of an old and celebrated English nursery tale, Gies Gingerbread.
