Science and Law

IN the year 1935 a great sensation was occasioned in Toronto by what was known as the Hyams murder case. Two men bearing the names of Dallas Hyams and Harry Hyams were residents of Toronto for a short time, their place of abode being on Gould street, and they had rented a warehouse on Colborne street, not far from Yonge street. The residence still stands but the warehouse has been long since removed to make room for a more imposing structure. It was in the warehouse that they carried on some sort of a mercantile business, and it was there also that it was said that a young man, a friend of the two Hyams men, met his death under circumstances pointing to murder. The victim bore the name of William Wells. It was said that the death was occasioned by violence, and that the body of the deceased was placed under the weight or counterpoise of a freight elevator, with which the warehouse was equipped, the intention being to let it be imagined that the death was accidental, having been caused by the unexpected fall of the elevator weight while the youth was in a recumbent position at the foot of the elevator shaft and engaged in some operation with it.

At the trial eminent lawyers appeared on both sides, the late E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., and the late Mr. Justice Lount appearing for the two accused men, while the crown's case was ably presented by the late B. B. Osler, K.C., and Mr. Hartley H. Dewart, K.C., who is still among us. Considerable importance was attached to the allegation which was made in the case to the effect that the weight got stuck in the shaft, and began to fall in an inclined position, and the defence maintained that this inclination caused the corner of the weight to fall upon the deceased's head, and inflicted upon him the wound of which he died. It was pointed out that the weight was not so, and that even if the weight began its fall in an inclined manner, it would right itself before completing its downward journey.

An expert witness in the person of a professor of Physical Science from Toronto University was called to give evidence upon the question. For some reason or other his evidence upon this point was not sufficiently definite or sufficiently impressive to suit the theory of the crown, and when he had finished his evidence in chief, Mr. Osler arose, in all his splendid majesty, to perform upon the unending unity professor all the operation which the great counsel was so well able to do, and had so often done in the days gone by, namely to make the witness recant his previous utterances, and humbly admit sufficient to satisfy the necessities of the great counsel for the crown.

Mr. Osler asked the witness to repeat what he already had said, and then as if in supreme ridicule asked him if he intended the intelligent jury to believe that if a weight fell in an inclined position it would fall to assume the perfectly perpendicular before reaching the ground? The humble professor meekly admitted that that was what he intended. "Then," said the mighty Osler, "we shall see how long your theory lasts," and tying a saw cord to a great ledger which was lying upon the desk before him, he mounted the desk, held the book out before him and at a considerable distance from the floor, and also inclined to a considerable angle, and invited the witness and the jury to observe the shattering of the theory of the learned professor. Letting go of the cord, the book fell, when to the surprise of the illustrious lawyer it never swerved from its angular position and struck the floor with a terrible noise, and with its corner hitting the floor first.

As if maddened at the provoking manner in which science had baffled the theory of the crown, Mr. Osler in perfect disgust turned around, descended from the table, and told him (witness) he was done, while the crown's theory, and with it all hope of convicting the accused men of murder, vanished at once from the minds of everyone connected with the case.

A little later a verdict of "Not Guilty" freed the two men.

A Wise Westerner.
What is regarded largely as a triumph for conciliatory methods, introduced in the treatment of public functionaries in the Saar Valley by ex-Mayor Waugh, of Winnipeg, Canadian member of the Saar Valley Commission, set up under the League of Nations to administer the affairs of that territory for the next fifteen years, is contained in a message received from Saarbrücken in London. It states both the Bavarian and German Governments have agreed to transfer authority over their former employes in the Saar Valley district, which was a matter of contention between these officials and the commission, until Mr. Waugh effected a better understanding of the commission.

Woman as City Clerk.
Miss Martha Dickinson, who for the past eighteen years has been employed in the office of the City Clerk in Windsor, and who for a large part of that time has discharged acceptably the duties of City Clerk Lusted, was recently by a practically unanimous vote of the council, appointed to succeed Mr. Lusted upon his retirement this year. The position carries with it a salary of $2,400 a year. It is believed Miss Dickinson will be the first woman in Canada ever named to a similar position. Ald. Wood alone voted against the appointment. Besides Miss Dickinson, there were six other applicants for the position.

GUARDED MARRIAGES.

Figures Indicate Some Odd and Interesting Facts.

Nobody seems to know why June is the favored time for marriage ceremonies, but it was so regarded even by the ancient Romans, the junior branch of whose legislature (Juniores) probably gave the month its name.

A Canadian who likes statistics has figured that in Canada there are now more brides of 20 to 24 than of any other age, and more grooms of 25 to 29. These things are all tabulated mathematically nowadays, and that is the way it has worked out in other years. The popular idea that modern conditions has postponed the marrying age of the fair sex until after 25 is reached is not borne out by the Ontario Government's statistics, which show for one year 1,939 Toronto brides between 20 and 24, as compared with 1,129 between 25 and 29, which means that over 70 per cent. more marry at the earlier of these age-groups. The number of women under 30 who wed in Toronto in a year is 3,833, as compared with 1,157 older women, the latter figure of course including many second marriages. So that when one score years and ten have slipped by, the feminine chances of matrimony appear to be about one in four, as compared with those of younger folk. The following table of Toronto marriage ages tells the story:

Age.	Actual Number of Groom	Percentage of Total Bride Groom
15-19	199	765 4 15
20-24	1,371	1,939 28 39
25-29	1,461	1,129 29 22 1/2
30-34	724	514 14 10
35-39	574	314 11 6
40-44	267	157 5 3
45-49	171	91 3 2
50-54	96	39
55-59	51	28
60-64	48	10
65-70	18	2
70 and up	10	2 4/4 2

The statistics reveal many ill-assorted couples so far as age is concerned. Three grooms of fifteen to twenty-five marry women of 70 or over, wedded grooms of 55-59 and 60-65, respectively. One groom of 70 or over took a bride in the 25-29 group. It may be added that the Toronto figures are typical proportionately of those of other English-speaking sections of Canada.

The modern marriage ceremony differs little from that of our forefathers, when the bride was taken "for fairer for fouler" and promised to be "buxom and bonny." The ring, symbol of that which is without end, was at one time placed on each of the left-hand fingers in turn by the groom. In Anglo-Saxon days it was part of the word "wed" or pledge, from which the word wedding is derived, and was given by the groom in childhood betrothals and thereafter worn on the right hand until marriage, when the father gave the groom one of his daughter's shoes as a token of authority over her. But 'tis said that nowadays there is little authority—that the groom does not want it and that the bride would not permit it anyway. The thing has become a real partnership; a change from the days when the Welsh law allowed the husband to discipline his wife by means of "three blows with a broomstick on any part of the person except the head." This "fair allowance," as the law called it, was not to be administered with a stick longer than his middle finger. But there is none of that sort of authority in this June of 1930. And the "best man" no longer have the qualifications which earned him that name in days when the groom had to surround his bride with a retinue of his "best" or strongest friends, lest some other suitor snatch her away. Fears of that sort of thing have vanished. But high rents and high prices have taken their place as sources of worry.

A Gifted Canadian.
Musical critics in London, England, speak of the "extraordinary and enthusiastic" reception given to Mme. Peggy Murray, the Canadian "disease," at the recital she gave at the Steinway Hall. The audience included a number of prominent Canadians. Mme. Murray's rendering of some of W. H. Drummond's "Habitant" poems was particularly pleasing, especially "The Red Canoe," "The Snow Bird," "The Red Canoe," and "The Little Canadiane." Perhaps the best of her program, however, were Kipling's "How the Rhino Got His Skin" and J. Whitecomb Riley's "Bear Story." Miss Murray was born at Ottawa, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Poaps, and is the wife of Mr. Webster Murray, the artist, who is the son of Dr. Murray, of Toronto.

Singing in the Bathroom.
An impulse that apparently is familiar to many people, to burst into song when in a bathroom, is explained by a British scientist as being an induced effect of the music of running water, which virtually sounds the pitch for the occupant of the tub. The resonance of the room encourages the effort, giving an unaccounted quality to the voice, says Popular Mechanics. In other rooms the furnishings break up the vibrations and deaden the tone, making the contrast quite conspicuous.

She Had Business Ability.
Dorothy asked her mother, "Give me a cent, please?"
"What is the use of me giving you a penny, how long will you have it?" replied her mother.
"Not a minute," apparently replied Dorothy, "but if you give me two cents it might last a little longer."

Precision.
"How much is this pair of shoes worth?" inquired the cautious trader.
"I am unable to inform you as to its intrinsic value," replied the haughty salesman. "All I can tell you is the price."
