CHAPTER VI.
BARRY AND UNA.

...tea at the old country inn came
...to Barry's expectation. Perhaps
...it is as well that they did not
...use if we had treated them some-
...would have had to go short. And
...could have been sorry to be that

...was in high spirits, and the life
...the party. Una was stirred out
...usual quietude to answer him.
...did you ever hear of ghosts eat-
...cream and fruit?" Barry shook
...head.

...some of these old legends are very
...I could believe anything af-
...the stories told us this afternoon."
...or nothing," laughed Una. They
...ld hardly have so many material
...if ghosts really peopled these
...rooms. And they say one cannot
...accommodation here during the
...months before."

...and Barry had wandered out
...the garden. It sloped winding-
...thick with straggling, uncut bush
...tree, down to the river that stole
...quietly along in the sunshine.

...are there any ghosts in the gar-
...I wonder?" said Barry. "I could
...tell them more readily than
...the house. This garden would
...ghostly by moonlight—unkept
...unweeded for, as it is, with the
...pale gleam of the river beyond
...the rays of the moon."

...like the garden," said Una. "It
...be horrid if the bushes were
...and made artificial. Oh,
...s charm about it now."

...wonder who the old maids
...mused Barry. His brief fit of
...spirits had fallen from him like
...ak. His very voice was softened
...lowered. And the faint lap-lap-
...of the river against the reeds
...be heard. By common consent
...and Una turned and walked to-
...ward it.

...I wonder," she said. "They
...t of us that legend, did they?
...ps there was no story at all
...Very quiet, gentle old
...Who had never really work-
...at all. For nothing ever hap-
...to them. Theirs was really a
...existence—a shadow and
...om of life. Perhaps it was the
...ghost that ever haunted there.
...had no story, they had
...here—and died. They had
...garden, and their need, work,
...perhaps a dog or a cat. No child
...ung life that would have made
...alive, whether they would or
...she had not the courage to tell him
...dare say children avoided them,
...so they had no story, you see.
...never loved—no love above
...ght to them. No, I think there
...e real ghost-story here. And it
...e story of many lives."

...spoke in a dreamy undertone,
...Barry, who always laughed away
...sentiment, said as
