ANANIAS AT ABINGDON?

A correspondent from Abingdon, having read of the wonderful growth of the corn stalk at Welland port in the last issue of the Review, has this to say of a certain corn stalk in that locality:—"We as a people sympathize with the parents of the boy at the top of the corn stalk, and do sincerely trust he will get down safely, when the cold weather sets in and the stalk stops growing. But that Welland-port corn stalk isn't in it with the one that is growing near Abingdon. The proprietor is contemplating on building a silo around its lower extremities to save labor and the high cost of filling. This stalk has grown so tall and has reached so near the sun that the corn is popping and falling down in torrents. The hired man who has been missing for some time is supposed to be up there regulating the feed. Two automobile trucks have been hauling the popped corn and supplying the Exposition for the past two weeks. Since starting to write the proprietor has been in communication with the hired man by wireless, which states that he is up there alright and expects to be down all o.k. when the silo settles in the late fall. More could be said about this wonderful stalk, but for fear someone may doubt the truth about this article and possibly get the Review into trouble, Putman's Corn Cure has been resorted to and the growth of the corn has been stopped.—Smithville Review.

If you think our town's the best
Tell 'em so—
If you'd have us lead the rest,
Help it grow!
When there's anything to do
Let the others count on you—
You'll feel bully when it's thru
Don't you know!
If you're used to giving knocks
Change your style!
Throw bouquets instead of rocks
For a while.
Let the other fellow roast—
Shun him as you would a ghost
Meet his hammer with a boost
And a smile.
When a stranger from afar
Comes along,
Tell him who and what we are—
Make it strong!
Never flatter, never bluff;
Tell the truth—that's enough
BOOST FOR JARVIS! — that's the stuff, boost along!

Varency Institute

On September 2nd, the Nanticoke W.I. and Varency W.I. met at the home of Mrs. Dan Kindry where an enjoyable as well as a profitable afternoon was spent. Nanticoke W.I. furnished the program which was excellent, consisting of the best of papers, songs, and instrumental music, also current events. Those who missed this meeting missed a lot. The Institute wishes to thank Mrs. Kindry for her hospitality. Next meeting will be held at Mrs. Lundy's Oct. 7.

The animal that got the prize for being the best shortborn on the grounds at the Jarvis fair, and owned by John Walker, was sired by a bull whose dam has a record of 1773 lbs. milk and 636 lbs. fat. His calf took first last year in a class of six. This should be proof that there is such a thing as a dual purpose cow.

HISTORY OF EPIDEMICS.

Why People Call Disease Influenza or Grippe.

Influenza is a very ancient disease. Dr. Francis Heckel writes in "Illustration (Paris)", that it was formerly called as one of the "pests" or plagues under which name all grave epidemics were known by our remote ancestors, who did not yet differentiate between typhus, diphtheria, pneumonia, and bubonic plague, cerebro-spinal meningitis, "grippe" and other diseases. Each of these has its distinctive symptoms, but all of them possess characteristics in common, and even to-day physicians often find it difficult to make a certain diagnosis until the malady is well developed.

The history of influenza epidemics is well established since the fifth century of the Christian era. For fifteen hundred years it has returned regularly from five to ten times a century, except in the eighteenth, when it showed itself in the years 1709-10, 1729-30, 1732-33, 1737-38, 1742-43, 1757-58, 1761-62, 1768, 1775-76, 1780-82, 1788-89, 179-1800.

The nineteenth century was exceptionally free, having had only light epidemics of influenza. The last of these, however, that of 1889, returned every winter until 1895, thus persisting for about six years.

The name "influenza" dates from 1742, when it was given to the epidemic in Italy; at the same time the name "grippe" was given to it in France. The term "facies grippe" had been used before to describe the thin, drawn face, with sunken eyes and waxy skin, bearing every sign of depression and exhaustion. This face is seen whenever the sympathetic nervous system and the suprarenal glands are deeply touched by an infection. From this term the word "grippe" was derived.

Dr. Heckel says the term "Spanish fever" or "Spanish influenza," given to the epidemic in 1918, is quite incorrect, for that epidemic, like all others, was born where it is always prevalent—that is to say, Russia, Turkestan and the surrounding regions.

There is no doubt about the microbic origin of influenza, but it is certain that the microbes that cause it have not been discovered. All those that have been suspected, including the Pfeiffer bacillus, are merely the agents of the secondary complications and are the habitual guests of our nasal passages and throat. They are no trouble to healthy, strong persons, but once the system is enfeebled by lack of nourishment, cold, etc., then they begin their ravages.

Recent experiments by Dr. Trillat, of the Pasteur Institute, show that the very air we breathe serves as a medium in which the invisible microbes of influenza flourish when it contains certain gases of organic origin, such as the exhaled human breath contains in great quantities.
