THE STOCKING FRAME

A Curate's Love Affair Led to the Invention.

The love of a poor Nottinghamshire curate for a certain young woman who could not afford to stop knitting her woollen stockings to listen to his love-making was responsible for the introduction of the stocking frame.

The curate, whose name was William Lee, immediately set his wits to work to solve the difficulty, and in 1589 he invented his stocking-frame.

He removed to London, and Queen Elizabeth saw his ingenious invention, which could also be used, and was used later, for the first time in the manufacture of silk stockings.

The Queen, however, refused to grant this enterprising clergyman a patent for his invention. She professed too great a love for her subjects who earned their daily bread in the old-fashioned manner of hand-knitting, and concluded her objections by remarking that "to enjoy the exclusive privilege of making stockings for the whole of my subjects is too important to grant any individual."

Poor Lee was bitterly disappointed, but not altogether deterred; a few years later he applied his invention for the making of silken hose, whereupon the French Ambassador tempted him to go to Rouen. But in 1610 he returned to England, still disappointed.

Ten years later, a miller of Thornton, in Nottingham, greatly improved his discovery, and from that time onwards the frame-knitters became more numerous.

And though the weaving of silk stockings was first introduced by Mr. Lee, they were first worn some years earlier in France by Henry II., and in 1560 a pair of hand-knit silk stockings was presented to Queen Elizabeth by Mrs. Montague, her "silk woman," and we are told that the Queen was so pleased with them that from that time onwards she never again wore a pair of cloth hose.

The Renaissance of Learning.

The most striking fact about life to-day is its earnestness, its purposeful activity, says Mr. Alexander Campbell in the English Review.

"People are not wholly preoccupied in drinking and drowsing," he writes. "The multitude is engaged in laboriously instructing itself; it has opened the gate to a glorious renaissance in art and learning, and the flood is pouring through. In the whole recorded history of the land I doubt if there has been such a mental questing as is now to be observed. The Elizabethan period produced its blossoms, and so indeed did the Victorian era. Nevertheless there was never before such an ardent search for knowledge, such a budding and bursting into flower.

"In London there is a great cultural renaissance. These things really are not confined to Manchester. The art schools, I read, are crowded. There never was such enthusiasm for art. There are waiting lists at the schools everywhere. British science was never in a healthier condition than to-day. The bias towards scientific study was never so pronounced. The young man of 1914 did not devote himself to science as does the young man of 1920.

"At the universities throughout the country the spirit of inquiry is rife. Study is now taken seriously. The lectures are attended en masse, so to speak. I hear that there have been queues of students anxious to hear the Einstein discoveries explained clearly. I trust they were not disappointed. In the newer universities there is also overcrowding. There is enthusiasm for research. The new generation has new interests and it meets in a challenging spirit.

"This great renaissance is, in large part, attributable to the war. Young men were violently uprooted and cast far afield. People who before 1914 knew little of the world have been touring it in khaki. They have rubbed shoulders with other civilizations. They have observed other people's habits and have come to view the habits and customs of their own country with a calm and sober-eyed detachment. The seed of criticism sown, there has been the usual harvest. In the army, too, it may be added, men were introduced to new worlds of thought."

Steeplejacks at School.

Aldershot, England, has the distinction of being the first town to possess a school for training steeplejacks.

All the pupils are young men between seventeen and twenty-one years of age, and among them are youths who have just completed engineering or building apprenticeships.

"Since I have started the school," said the founder, "I have been struck by the difference in temperament of the pupils. Some of them cannot master the terrors of height for days, while others will scale a 130-foot chimney stack immediately they see it. A man who shows no fear when doing what we call 'straight climbing' often loses his nerve when the big tests are given him.

"These tests consist of a pupil climbing to a height of 130 feet, and swinging round the chimney on a platform suspended from the summit. The most exacting test for the young steeplejack, however, is for him to run round the top of a chimney only 9 inches in width. It is impossible to walk owing to the smoke and gases, and sometimes the chimney is too hot to stand upon."

Wanted Something Stronger.

Wishing to give his Scotch steward a treat, a gentleman invited him to London, and on the night after his arrival took him to a hotel to dine. During the early part of the dinner the steward was noticed to help himself very liberally to the champagne, glass after glass disappearing. Still he seemed very downhearted and morose. Finally he was heard to remark: "Well, I hope they'll not be long w' the shucker. I dunn get on vera well w' these mineral waters."

Do the Himalayas Creep?

Geodetic studies in the Himalayas and the Tibetan mountains have brought to light a very strong phenomenon, or one that must be regarded as very strange if it actually exists. It is no less than an apparent creeping of these gigantic mountain ranges, the mightiest on the globe, sideways toward the south, with a consequent crumpling up of the Siwalik hills. It has long been known that there exists curious anomalies in the density of the earth under and adjacent to the Himalayas, but this suggestion of a creeping motion is novel. The surveys which are still going on may eventually disclose the real facts, but the operations of the Tibetan side are rendered difficult by the fact that access to Tibet is positively forbidden to foreigners, even when they go there expressly in the name of science.

Screen-Struck Girls.

The Los Angeles police have their hands full taking care of the "screen-struck" girls, who find their way to that city at the rate of about fifty a week. All these girls aspire to be film heroines, but of course the great majority of them are unable to qualify.
