Fire at Garnet

The residence of Mr. B. Bailey, east of Garnet, had a close call from destruction by fire on Friday last. During the mid-day meal Mr. Bailey smelt smoke, and upon investigation found the upstairs full of smoke. The fire was in a room upstairs and was supposed to have originated from an overheated gas stove. The alarm was given and the neighbors came to his assistance, some with fire extinguishers, and by their use the blaze was got under control and the building saved from destruction. It is said had it not been for the extinguishers they could not have saved the house.

The Electric Hen

Not long ago there was a hen
Who burst into a cackle when
Somebody claimed electric light
Was used to boost more eggs in sight.
"Go on," said she, "such things can't be;
You guys are simply stinging me.
I am no foolish barn-yard bird.
And won't believe a single word.
I am a bashful girl and seek
To lay my four eggs every week.
But here's my ultimatum: Nix!
I plump refuse to make it six."
Now farmer Jones some time ago
Bought him a lighting dynamo
Which gave old Jones, the kids, the spouse
Town comforts in their country house.
One evening, when the hogs were fed
And Mrs. Jones had gone to bed
And Jones looked through the weekly paper,
He said, "By gosh, this is some caper!
Gee whiz, by gum, also by heck—
Here's where the eggs come by the peck.
That there professor—what the dance!—
He lays eggs with electric juice!"
So farmer Jones and his big son
Did as Professor Rice had done;
And in a day the wily scamps
Had strung the coops with 'lectric lamps—
Right soon it was as plain as day,
Things went on in a different way,
The rooster felt an inward urging
He was an hitter through and through,
The hets he missed were mighty few,
He labored with a vampish lust
To boost the egg supply or bust—
Till hens began to shake their legs
A laying eggs and eggs and eggs,
And Jones's dollar pile kept mounting
Till he lost track and quit the counting.
The moral isn't very far
And plainer than most morals are.
I understand it now, don't you?
The wonders 'lectric light can do.

How to Slay Exchange

(Welland Tribune and Telegraph.)

Your good Canadian dollar is being accepted in the United States at a discount of about eighteen per cent. The matter is one of very grave concern. It affects not only those who spend money in the United States, for, as a matter of fact, we all buy the products of our sister country.

When a coal dealer ships $1180 to New York to buy one thousand dollars' worth of coal the consumer of the coal is spending money in the United States, whether he gets from the dealer a bag of coal or a carload. At bottom this means that we are paying $12 for ten dollars' worth of goods. Not many of us can afford to do that. For those who can afford to do it it is bad business. This condition has only to exist long enough to put Canada in a position of economic bondage to the United States.

What can we do to help ourselves?

Let us admit, first of all, that we must continue to go to the United States market for certain products which are absolutely essential to our welfare. These must be bought, but they should be bought sparingly and guarded with a miser's care.

Let us recognize, next, that we are buying in the United States market millions upon milions of dollars worth of goods annually which cannot be classified as necessities. The ruthless knife should be applied here. and unless it is applied disaster faces this country.

For months the exchange rate has been mounting.

For months Canadian purchases in the United States have been mounting, too.

A prudent people would have put on the brakes, Canadians have been sailing full steam ahead. Reckless and selfish spending is the cause of our trouble; careful and parsimonious spending is the only cure.

Exchange is a big national question, but its solution lies in the hands of every one of us.

Your unnecessary dollar spent in the United States is a needless offense to your home country, your home stores, your home industries and your home workers.

Resolve this very minute that not a cent of your money will go needlessly to the United States.
