BOLSHEVIKI RUTHLESS

ENGLISH SECRET SERVICE MAN TELLS ABOUT RUSSIA

Sir Paul Dukes Does Not Think That Trotsky and Lenin Will Lose Power for Some Time to Come—How Brave Britisher Served His Country by Masquerading as "Red" Soldier.

WHAT are the prospects of success for the present Russian uprising against Trotsky and Lenin? Not very favorable, according to Sir Paul Dukes who left that country a short time ago. He calls attention to the fact that there have been perhaps a dozen efforts made by the anti-Bolsheviks in the past three years, and that only four months ago one of them was bloodily suppressed. His opinion is that in four months it would be impossible for the Russians opposed to the present autocrats to organize and provide themselves with arms. To secure the necessary military equipment would be a matter of extreme difficulty, for nobody not a member of the Red Committee is permitted to possess a rifle, and even the army itself is not supplied with arms until a battle is about to begin. Of course, there is the prospect of this army, having been served with weapons, turning against the present rulers. This the soldiers would only do when failure of the revolution seemed impossible. Otherwise the penalties for revolt are so serious as to discourage mutiny.

Sir Paul confirms the opinion of practically every competent observer who has reported upon Russian affairs that the Bolsheviks are really a small minority of the Russian population, and that the sentiment against them is growing steadily. The peasants now feel that they have been cheated. It was all very well to confiscate the land of the rich proprietors, but the workers do not approve of the land being nationalized. What they demand is that the land shall be parcelled out and privately owned among those who work upon it. This is the platform of the Social Revolutionists, an anti-Bolshevik organization, which in a fair election would certainly sweep the Bolsheviks from power. The trouble with this party as with several others which are alike in their common hatred of Bolshevism is that they have no opportunity of putting their views before the public. The only newspapers that are permitted to appear are controlled by the Bolsheviks. Public meetings of protest are forbidden.

Secret organizations is beset with as many difficulties as surrounded the Nihilists in the days of czarism. Spies swarm everywhere. One of the reasons why the Bolshevik revolution succeeded and has been able to perpetuate itself is that Lenin and Trotsky took over the Extraordinary Commission, the highly organized secret service of the czar. These spies serve their new masters faithfully because they must. The Reds have control of the means of distributing food, and at their will an individual, a family, or a community could be brought to starvation. The spies are well paid and their families are well supplied with food. It was as much due to the work of these spies as to the efforts of the Red armies that preceding revolts have been crushed, and Sir Paul thinks it will be hardly short of a miracle if the present rebellion is not quelled.

Sir Paul Dukes' adventures in Russia were of the sensational order. When war broke out, Dukes was a young man, assistant manager of the imperial opera in Petrograd, he had spent most of his youth in the country and spoke Russian like a native and had many Russian friends. At the time he was writing for English newspapers and magazines and was a regular correspondent of the London Times. He became a member of the Anglo-Russian commission, and in 1917 took an active part in the revolution that established Kerensky for a brief period. When the Reds triumphed he attached himself to the American Y.M.C.A. until this organization was expelled from Russia. Then Dukes returned to England and became a member of the British Secret Service. In 1918 he proceeded to Stockholm to await an opportunity of slipping into Russia, and neatly avoided a trap set for him by Litvinoff, who tried to lure him to Petrograd, evidently for the purpose of making away with him.

In September, Capt. Crombie, the British Naval Intelligence Officer, was murdered at Petrograd, and Dukes determined to go there to take over his duties. In Finland he let his hair and beard grow, acquired the clothes of a Russian peasant, and bribed some Finns to row him across a river into Russian territory. In landing he splashed into the water, thus arousing some Red guards who contented themselves by firing a volley in the general direction of the noise, and doing no damage. Dukes made his way to the capital and was taken in by some former friends who were secretly hostile to Bolshevism. A friend he trusted betrayed him and he had to flee again. He found a refuge with a doctor and posed as an epileptic when examined by the Reds who desired to enroll him in the army. Eventually he did become a Red soldier in a regiment whose commander was a strong anti-Bolshevik. The colonel gave him frequent opportunities of visiting Moscow to get information and he helped him send his letters to England. For two years he was able to keep up his correspondence without being detected. Then feeling that he had done all that he could do and that further sojourn in Russia would be both useless and dangerous he escaped into Latvia and thence made his way home to receive among other emoluments a knighthood for his valuable services.

HAS STIRRED UP ANTIQUARIES

Englishman Believes He Has Discovered the Site of Edward the Confessor's Palace.

In Windsor's great park the discovery has been made of what appears to be the site of Edward the Confessor's palace. The discoverer, Capt. Vaughan Williams, had his attention drawn to two moats where rabbits had been burrowing, and here he unearthed some tiles like Norman bricks. He next came upon flints, sandstone and tiles, and he is continuing the search. In the days of Queen Victoria a tower with walls 12 feet thick was pulled down which was said by archeologists to have been built by Edward the Confessor. The secretary of the Berkshire Archeological society in connection with Captain Williams' find, states that there was before the foundation of Windsor castle a palace in Windsor forest where many notable events happened. This palace had a tower as a means of defense. In a Harleian MS. an illumination occurs which represents a palace where a lady is seen giving alms and earning for herself the title of "loaf-giver." The manor of Old Windsor belonged to the Saxon kings, and Edward the Confessor certainly held court there. Edward being prevented by his nobles from going to Rome caused Westminster to be built with the money which he would have spent on his journey. He then gave Old Windsor to the monks, but the gift was revoked by William the Conqueror, who found Windsor convenient for his hunts in the forests.

CITY MAY HAVE BIG FUTURE

Dakar, in South Africa, Promises to Develop into Something Like Another Liverpool.

The city of Dakar in South Africa, less than half a century ago in a really primitive condition, with naked children running around the streets and mothers working with babies strapped upon their backs, has suddenly come into prominence as the prospective "Liverpool" of Africa. In the keen competition that is expected between America and Europe for trade in South Africa, Dakar, it is believed, will have an important role to play.

The French are today making extensive improvements at Dakar. They have spent much money in enlarging the dry dock and making the harbor deeper as well as increasing the facilities for transferring cargo from boat to train. The Dakar of today is a thriving town of about 25,000 people, with wide well-laid-out streets, a large hospital, school, hospitals and workshops. There are, however, a great majority of natives, being in fact, only about 3,500 Frenchmen.

These natives have been said by some to have formerly been the masters of the Mediterranean. They are wonderful fighters and it was only with great difficulty that in 1862, Gen. Faidherbe, the French governor, was able to overcome them. Thus he paved the way for the founding of Dakar. We may know a great deal more about it later.

Navy's Great Airship Hangar.

The navy is purchasing its first rigid airship in England at a cost of $2,500,000. To house it a huge hangar is to be erected at Lakehurst, N. J., which will be 800 feet long, 265 feet wide, and will have a clear inside height of 174 feet, while the total height from the ground to the peak of the roof will be over 200 feet. The steel framework will be over 6,000 tons. Two elevators and several stairways will lead to the roof. The many shops necessary for the maintenance of the airships will be built in between the great arched trusses that support the roof. Three railroad tracks will run the entire length of the building. The hangar will be large enough to hold one ship of 10,000,000 cubic feet capacity, and a smaller one at each side, or two 5,000,000 cubic feet ships side by side.—Scientific American.

Loggers Use Electricity.

A lumber company cutting timber from one of the national forests has installed over a mile of electric transmission line through the woods to supply an electric logging engine with power. It is planned ultimately to use electricity for the entire camp. Current is developed at the mill. Since many forest fires start from logging equipment and camps, the government foresters regard the introduction of electrical equipment with much favor.

Portable Electric Grinder.

A portable electric grinder for the machine shop, designed to be moved over the work, has the motor of one-eighth to one-half horsepower placed above the work out of the operator's way. The spindle is bored with a five-sixteenth-inch hole to receive an adjustable shaft for interior grinding, and the use of interchangeable grinding wheels adapts the little machine to a wide range of work.

Practical Economy.

"Wife ever get an economical streak?"
"She does. Only this summer she figured out she could save $8 in one week by doing her own housework."
"How did it work out?"
"She got a cook book. I got dyspepsia and the doctor got the $8."
—Boston Transcript.

Unavoidable.

Hub—Oh, don't worry about the cook's crankiness. Don't take any notice of her.
Wife—I have to; she's just given it.
