Honey!

Some time ago, during a friendly discussion, the question was asked—What is honey? This may seem at first thought rather a simple thing to ask, and yet—What is honey?

The dictionary yields the information that "Honey is a vegetable product with saccharine properties collected by bees from flowers and deposited in the cells of their combs."

Now this a sufficiently true definition, but if we are looking for something really good to spread on hot-buttered toast, or biscuit, is it not delightful to know that honey is nature's perfect food—the essence of perfume secreted in the innumerable sweet-scented blossoms of the clover fields and gathered by the most intelligent creatures of insect life.

And when the wind is blowing and the snow blowing over these same fields, once noisy with the happy hum of busy bees, will it not be gratifying to have a goodly supply of this delicious and wholesome food ready for daily use?

It is now too late in the season to fill your containers, but we can supply 5 lb. pails at 90c each.

Don't let all the good things go to the city. Get your share.

ARTHUR HGDGSON.
