

RURAL ONTARIO GAINED IN POPULATION DURING THE LAST TEN YEARS

President Reynolds of Ontario Agricultural College Shattered Some Popular Conceptions in a Recent Speech—Considerable Shifting of Residents Due to Ascertained Economic Causes.

A despatch from Guelph says: There has been no rural depopulation in Ontario the last ten years, although there has been a considerable shifting of the population in the country districts in that period, asserted President Reynolds in a recent address.

There has been a shifting of population from back to front, from districts distant from markets to the neighborhood of markets; from districts ill provided with transportation to those well provided; from general farming areas to areas where climate and soil favor intensified farming; from general farming areas in old Ontario to general farming areas in New Ontario, where land is cheap and fertile; from small villages and towns to larger towns and cities. So far as census returns are available, these indicate a small net rural increase, said the speaker.

In districts where a decline in population has actually occurred, it does not necessarily mean either abandonment of land as a result or a decline in earning power as a cause.

The causes mainly are these, said Professor Reynolds: Increased use of machinery, enabling the cultivation of more acres per man. The results are larger farms, fewer farmers and fewer families.

The difficulty in hiring competent labor, outdoors and in, is owing to higher wages paid in industries than the farmer is able to pay.

Young people particularly have been attracted to town life and occupations, so that eventually many homesteads are sold to neighbors and the size of the holdings increased, with the system of farming becoming less intensive.

Not only are there fewer families in such districts, but smaller families. Schools and churches and social life have consequently declined, and with these have declined the general satisfaction of country life.

Added to this is the lack of transportation and of market facilities in most of all the back districts, where general farming is in vogue.

Population has declined in the mixed farming districts. The decline entails certain social disabilities, already mentioned, it does not mean an economic disability to the farmers themselves. It means, rather, a lower production, less competition, and consequently better returns.

To the nation and the world, however, this decline in productive power in agriculture means a distinct loss. For agriculture more than any other productive occupation creates wealth, and a decline in producing power in this class means a decline in the means of subsistence and a decline in wealth production. Hence rural depopulation is less a problem for rural people than for townspeople and for the nation.

In an analysis of the 1921 census returns, President Reynolds declared that the districts surrounding large cities have become suburban areas, places of residence for those working in the city.

Such a district encourages specialized and intensive farming (a) to furnish local supplies of food, such as milk, fruit and vegetables; (b) to supply raw material for city manufacturing. (There is little co-ordination in this matter between farming and city manufacturing.)

Where climate and soil are favorable, intensive and specialized farming is on the increase with corresponding increase in local population.

Where dairying or fruit-growing are followed extensively with mixed farming the population tends to remain steady. Instances are: Dairying, Oxford, Brant, Perth, Waterloo, Hastings, Haldimand; fruit-growing, Prince Edward, Norfolk, Elgin.

The mixed farming areas, without large local markets to encourage specialized farming, have declined heavily in population. For instance: Huron, Bruce, Grey and Dufferin.

There are 24 cities in Ontario, with a total population of 1,083,855. The decennial increase is 274,444, or 34.8 per cent. Only one city, Owen Sound, declined in population in the period. Of 60 villages and towns having populations between 500 and 2,500, 37 have lost population to the amount of 5,959, and 23 have gained 4,736.

In old Ontario the following shows the shift in the population of such municipalities:

South of 43rd—Gained 9, lost 4.
North of 43rd—Gained 7, lost 32.
In 50 towns having a population of 2,500 and under 5,000, 37 have gained a population of 41,734, and 13 have lost 4,661.

List of towns declining in population—Petrolia, Arnprior, Campbellford, Cobalt, Copper Cliff, Ganarook, Godsch, Halleyburg, Meaford, Picton, Port Hope, Prescott, Strathroy.

Of 21 towns having a population of 35,521 and over, 18 have gained a population of 1,200, and three have lost 1,200. The three are—Brookville, Collingwood and Kenora.

Summary of Population Increases. Cities—274,444.
21 towns, 5,000 and over—34,324.
50 towns, 2,500 to 5,000—37,973.
18 districts of New Ontario—49,104.
Rural areas of old Ontario—18,381.
Total—407,826.

The population of the rural areas of old Ontario in open country and villages under 2,500 is thus seen to have increased by 18,381.

West Needs 41,000 Harvesters

A despatch from Winnipeg says: Forty-one thousand harvesters will be required to handle the prairie crops this year, exclusive of those to be obtained from prairie cities and towns, it was announced at a meeting of representatives of the railways, western Labor Commissioners and the grain trade interests. The rates of wages discussed were $3.50 a day for harvesters and $4 a day for threshers.

The harvesters excursion will commence to arrive in Winnipeg from Eastern Canada August 7 and will continue until August 25. Excursion trains will leave Victoria, Vancouver and New Westminster from August 14 to 29, inclusive.

Of the total number of men required, 37,000 will be drawn from Eastern Canada and 4,000 from British Columbia.

BRITISH OWN THE SUNK LUSITANIA

U.S. Government Decides Against American Claim for Salvage.

A despatch from London says:—The United States Government will not demand permission for an American salvage vessel either to attempt to raise the Lusitania or to obtain the bullion on board, the American Embassy has announced.

Although the Lusitania was sunk ten miles off shore, or outside the three-mile limit, the fact that it was British property is regarded as entitling British salvagers to lift it or to get the booty.

Owned by the Cunard Line, the Lusitania was subsidized by the British Government and insured under the War Risk Bureau, which was a Government concern.

An English firm is outfitting a vessel to seek the Lusitania's gold hoards, and it was announced in Philadelphia that an American ship is about to try the same thing. The English company rights in salvaging the ship, and it is reported here that the American firm asked the State Department to safeguard its interests in seeking the sunken Lusitania on the ground that it is more than three miles off shore and therefore public property.

The Washington decision that the Lusitania still belongs to the British is expected to settle the knotty problem, which might have raised the specter of a naval battle between the salvage crews, both of whom were determined to seize the bullion.

We might take lessons of the birds in their economical husbandry of the unconsidered trifles, as Shakespeare's Autolycus would call them.

They take pieces of old string or cotton that we have thrown away, or a few twigs, and make of them that wonderful thing—a home.

Those who know how will take corsets and toothpicks and tissue paper and fashion amusing dolls and toys with them; some are clever to make cups and plates out of tin cans; it was one with sense just a little sharper than the rest who saw rivers of gasoline running to waste and turned them into rivers of gold.

There is money in sawdust, cull, slag, sunshine, the water of the sea, the clay of the road, the carbon of the tract.

Waste is everywhere. We do not use what we have, for we do not think it is enough.

A novelist finds a story where an unobscured, unimaginative person sees only the hard, bare realism of a sordid incident. Comparatively few are able to perceive the gleam of glory that, to the sentient, shines even from a paving-stone underfoot.

The inventor who reaps a big profit is envied. Those who sigh for the fortune he amassed never pause to think of the host of failures from which he emerged the successful, shining phenomenon.

Millions of people had seen the lid of a kettle rise and fall with the steam, but nobody had seen the steam engine in the kettle till the genius came along who looked with the exceptional, synthetic mind behind the eyeball.

"Strive to be one of those on whom nothing is lost," said a wise teacher to a class of students. It is those on whom nothing is lost who rise above mediocrity, who pick a victory out from under the trampling heels of "the tidal multitude and blind." For every thing there were innumerable persons who passed the same way and had the same chance that he had and did not take it.

Too often the one who does not make a go of his lifework fails at fate, when it is not fate but himself that he ought to summon to a critical account. The

India's Wheat Crop 48% in Excess of Last Year

A despatch from Ottawa says:—India's wheat crop will be 48 per cent in excess of last year, or 9,818,000 tons, it is estimated by H. A. Chisholm, Canadian Trade Commissioner to India.

It is probable, he states, in his communication to the Department of Trade and Commerce, that India will be exporting instead of importing wheat before the end of the current year.

Western German Crops Reported a Failure

A despatch from Berlin says:—Owing to the great drought from May until the middle of July, the harvest in western Germany is a complete failure in large areas; in official announcements, this is especially true in the Rhine Province and the Bavarian Palatinate.

Anti-War Demonstrations Mark Anniversary

A despatch from London says:—No more war! demonstrations were held in fifteen counties and eighty towns and cities in England the week-end preceding the anniversary of the outbreak of the war. Organizations of all kinds here co-operated to make the demonstrations representative of all sections of the people. A big demonstration was planned in Hyde Park July 29 and in fact the population of London from twenty to thirty thousand marched to the scene in a procession. This included delegates from Germany, Austria, France and Belgium.

The organizers aim to make "no more war day" an annual festival day.

BRITAIN MUST NOT CANCEL WAR DEBTS

Federation of British Industries Oppose Action at Present Time.

A despatch from London says:—Opposition to any plan of cancellation of the French debt to Great Britain while Great Britain is forced to pay its huge debt to America is growing in financial and business quarters.

The Federation of British Industries, an organization representing the greatest manufacturing interests in the country, came out definitely on Thursday against cancellation of the Allied debts to Great Britain, if this country has to pay its debt to America.

The Federation supports the idea of a moratorium regarding payment of interest on the Allied debt to Great Britain, if France, Italy and Belgium are willing to agree to a readjustment of reparations claims, which would enable Germany, under suitable safeguards and supervision, to set its finances in order.

The Federation holds that the cancellation of the debt would only be justified by a general settlement and that there is nothing at present which would indicate that public opinion in America and Europe is ripe for any such scheme.

The Federation says: "To cancel the debt is not only to throw away our principle bargaining weapon in any future settlement, but to run grave risk that the settlement may never be made."

There is a belief in well-informed quarters here that Premier Lloyd George, at the outset of the conference of Allies on reparations, will be more likely to suggest postponement of interest payments by France and to try to obtain a down-scaling of German reparations, than he is to propose any clean-cut debt cancellation.

It is recognized that cancellation may some day be inevitable, but if any progress toward restoration of Germany can be accomplished by relieving France of interest or capital payments for a long term of years, George's line of negotiation during the London conference.

CLIFDEN WIRELESS STATION SEIZED AND DAMAGED BY IRISH IRREGULARS

Present Fighting is Last Lap in the Campaign of the Nationals, Says General McKeon—Wanton Destruction Wrought to Towns by Rebel Forces.

A despatch from London says:—The Irregulars have seized and apparently put out of commission the great Marconi wireless station at Clifden, County Galway. This was one of the company's most powerful stations.

For a time officials waited with some curiosity to see whether the Irregulars, following the example of the Russian Bolsheviks and German Spartacists, in 1919, would use the station to address messages to sympathizers throughout the world.

"However, we are now convinced from internal evidence," said a Marconi official, "that in their ignorance the Irregulars have sufficiently damaged the station to put it beyond their possible use. We are now sending Canadian messages through our station at North Weald, England."

Clifden was the first great wireless station, dating back to 1907.

Free State troops have routed the Irregulars from virtually all important posts in Mayo. They have formed into small guerrilla bands, rounding up of which will require some time.

In Connacht, they have been likewise dispersed. Before leaving Castlebar, they attempted, after burning the jail and military barracks, to destroy the post office, but the townspeople, headed by the clergy, made them desist.

Westport, the Irregulars' headquarters in the west, was hastily abandoned a surprise attack Monday, the garrison fleeing to the hills.

A despatch from Dublin says:—Westport, Newport and Ballaghaderreen fell into the hand of the Regulars on Thursday.

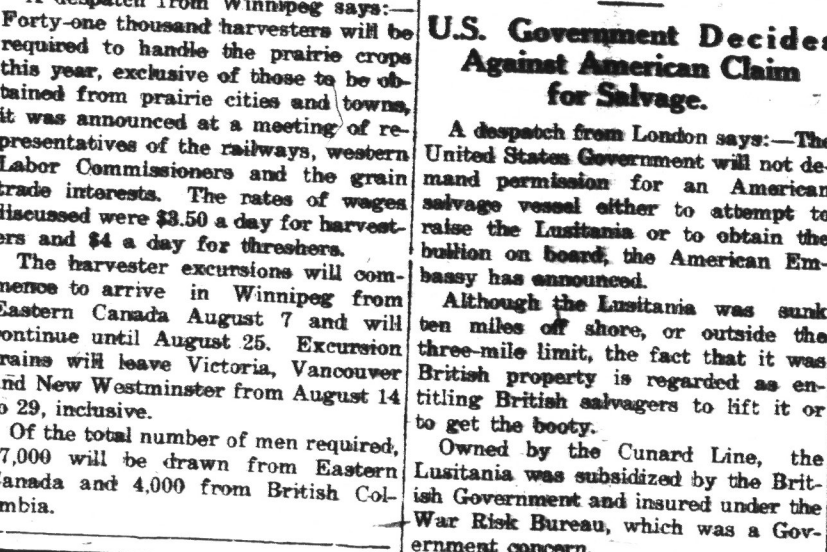

The Irregulars left the last-named town in lorries and seized motor cars. Before leaving, they set fire to the barracks. The majority of the population were strong supporters of De Valera's policy, but the ordeal to thrive under such privations as the campaign necessitated is said to have completely changed their views.

Several thousand pounds damage was done to the town before the Irregulars left. It is the centre of the constituency of East Mayo and is represented in the Irish Parliament by De Valera.

In Claremorris, recently captured by the Nationals, General John J. McKeon, commander of the Nationals, delivered a speech, in which he said: "The National troops do not come as dictators. They come as protectors of lives and property, and we are prepared, if necessary, to protect them at the sacrifice of our own lives."

He referred to the present fighting as the last lap in the campaign of the Nationals.

The Reason.

"Smart boy wanted."

Such was the notice hung outside a busy City warehouse.

It had not been there long before a little fellow, red-headed and freckled, calmly lifted it down, and went inside briskly.

"Did you hang this outside, sir?" he asked the manager.

"Yes!" was the stern reply. "Why did you pull it down?"

The boy looked at him for a few moments. "Pity for the man's ignorance was expressed on his face.

Then he spoke, and his reply was short, but to the point.

"Why?" he said. "Why, because 'im'!"

Let us have the marines to ascribe the blame not to impersonal causes, but to our own mismanagement of the human machine committed to our hands to run. We wonder at those who do so much and seem so singularly gifted. It may be they had little; but they made much of that little. They took the odds and ends because they had no better; they took the leavings contemned by others; of the time, futile when a marvel; yet it was no more than what Alexander Mackenzie called "the use of what we have." If we use our all, we shall often be amazed to find how much it grows to be.
