EASY TRICKS An Unfair Game

This catch game may be played on a friend two or three times before he "catches on" that it is a swindle in which he cannot win. Take a handful of matches out of your pocket and, holding them in a bunch, break them in two. Throw the pieces of matches on a table and say to your unsuspecting friend: "Now, you take one and I'll take one and so on until between us we have all of the pieces. The person getting the last piece wins." Of course—as this is a swindle you win. You repeat the trick: this time you take the first match. Again you win. The secret is simple. No matter how many matches you took out of your pocket, you made the number of pieces even by breaking the matches in two. The number being even, the person taking the second piece will take the last. While winning, however, you prepared for the repetition of the trick by dropping one of the pieces on the floor. That made the Lumber odd. In that case the man getting the first piece, also gets the The moral is-don't play the
