HORSE IS KILLED IN AUTO SMASH

Three Have Narrow Escape When Machine Collides with Buggy Just West of Village; Young Woman Suffering from Shock.

Three persons narrowly escaped serious injury, if not death Sunday evening when an automobile driven by John O'Rourke collided with a buggy driven by Robert Austin of the Scotch line, accompanied by Miss Appleford.

The horse on the buggy was so badly injured it had to be killed. O'Rourke is one of the drivers of the bus form Hamilton to Simcoe. Sunday his machine broke down as he reached Caledonia, his home, and he left it there and took his father's touring car to complete the trip.

As he was returning from Simcoe he met the buggy driven by Austin and collided with it on the Talbot road just west of the village. The auto struck the horse about the fore-quarters, injuring it so badly it was not able to get up and it was shot.

A front wheel was torn off the buggy and the automobile was badly wrecked.

None of the occupants of either the buggy or automobile were badly injured, although Miss Appleford is reported to be suffering from the shock.

In the Crow's Nest

ON THE WAY TO CROW'S NEST—THE HIGHEST WOODEN BRIDGE IN THE WORLD.

Rolling up to the Crow's Nest Pass are olive green foothills without a tree upon them—natural cattle runs clothed with succulent short grass. Here are seen occasional outcrops of rock, which in their four or five feet of height show all the characteristics of a mountain range; miniatures of the Rockies, with crag and precipice and col reproduced on the smallest scale. With a bag of salt one could lay on glaciers, touch the peaks with white and have a toy range which any Eastern schoolteacher could set up in her classroom with advantage to herself and her pupils. Canadians east of Medicine Hat know too little about the construction of this Continent and about the glorious engineering of Nature.

Consider the Crow's Nest itself. The name brings before some of us a schedule of railway-rates; to others, a series of coal mines. These are derivative impressions. The original Crow's Nest is a mountain rising to 9,000 feet and more above sea-level and visible for many miles. The rock-peak, as one looks from the foothills is set like a fuzzy, round crow's-nest on the sky-line. Leading up to it are the olive-green billows fading into a soft, blue haze.

In the distance near the peak is a snow-white precipice, which they tell us is two miles wide and a mile high. It is all excellence and loveliness until one travels twenty miles farther. Then it gleams like the fangs of a wolf. It is the rock-face of Turtle Mountain, cleft from top to bottom in 1905 to the destruction of the mining town of Frank.

To-day the whole valley, two miles wide, is a tempestuous chaos of white stone blocks, some of them as big as a house, all with jagged edges and sharp corners. They are piled from fifty to one hundred feet high above the original valley level. The railway line climbs over the debris. Beneath it lies the broken city. On either side of the avalanche stand a few deserted houses, windows out, glaring like skulls upon the newer town. The whole Herculesium, but they are like to forget the more terrible fate of Frank when rock by millions of tons fell a mile out of the sky.

Says Doctor is Hero in Battle

The result of his shy, retiring, modest disposition. That is the way Richard Nelles explains the report that he was the victor in a battle to death with a gigantic eagle near Lamb's Corners a couple of weeks ago. For Richard says it is not all true. The description of the battle, as appeared in The Record, is a correct word picture of the fracas, he says, but he maintains Dr. Leatherdale was the real hero of the venture.

He explained he has a sympathetic feeling for the doctor's retiring disposition and is loath to let the people know the story for fear of embarrassing his friend but he believes that as part of the story is out it is only fair that the whole of it should be known. "The doctor did not arrive in time to save me," he said. He arrived before the battle started. It was he of supreme modesty, he of the stuff heroes are made of, and not myself that launched that memorable, bold attack. It was he who did battle with a club, daring disfigurement of his classic features. It was good to see him poised for the battle, his sly-like form aquiver, eye darting fire that was even matched by the eagle's, his body couched, every muscle like knots of steel. I was enthralled, spell bound as it were, by the sight and could do nothing to help. The sylvan surroundings, the man and the beast in a battle to death. It was worth a lifetime to see it. And neither of them was a neophyte in the business of battling and neither was the bird armed with nature's weapons of the deadly kind, talons which if they had ever gained their aim would rend the human flesh and tear it to ribbons, a beak that is given only to birds of the hunter type to deal death—the man armed only with a club. There they stood and then the battle started. The bird lunged at the man and the man met it with a blow of the club. The battle was on. Attack after attack was launched by the bird. Each time it seemed as if its talons would clutch its opponent but each time the club fell in time to ward off the attack. But the big feathered creature had no doubt. The blows seemed to have little or no effect. Backward and forward the battle swayed. It seemed as if it would never end. The

FARMER IS HURT AS HORSE BOLTS

Harry Dougherty Suffers Broken Leg And Scalp Wound When He Tries To Stop Frightened Animal; His Condition is Satisfactory.

Harry Dougherty, who lives south-east of the village, suffered a broken leg and a severe scalp wound Saturday night when his horse ran away. Mr. Dougherty had hitched a horse to the back end of a wagon to draw it into the barn. His hired man was leading the horse and he was holding the wagon tongue when it struck the animal's heels, frightening it. It broke away from the man and Mr. Dougherty caught it. Before he could get it stopped he was jammed between the wagon and the barn.

Dr. J. I. Leatherdale attended his injuries. An x-ray taken in Simcoe Monday showed his condition to be satisfactory.

The bird's attacks came less frequent. Finally it lay still, the only sign of life being the rising and falling of its feathers as it labored for breath. Then and only then did the man relax. He looked at his late foe a moment and then sank to the ground in that rustic, picturesque spot and the battle was over. The quiet returned and the only signs of the struggle were the gasping bird and the panting man.

"The doctor soon recovered but there was a trace of sadness in his countenance that still remains. He had been the victor but his foe had been a noble one. The king of the birds had put up a truly royal battle. The man regretted that so brave a foe would have to die and not in battle either for the bird lived until it was brought to the village and saturated with chloroform."

Now, gentle reader, you have both sides of the story—the tale of a brave man and a brave beast with a touch of a stone age legend. You can pick your hero and crown him with the halo of your honor and anoint him with the oil of your good fellowship. As for the eagle: Dammum absque injuria.
