

The Economy

"SALADA" GREEN TEA

In the larger number of cups it gives per pound. — Delicious! — Try it.

Women's Interests

EVERY COAT HAS ITS OWN HAT.

With an extra half-yard of the coat material and a spare hour you can make the youngster a hat that matches. "Matching up" has come to be the distinguishing mark of excellence in the kiddie's clothes.

Little boy's sturdy greatcoats have caps of the same goods.

Little girl's broadcloth coats have neat little poke bonnets that match in texture and color.

Wool toddlers have leggings, mittens, bonnets, and coats of all one species.

Even brothers and sisters who aren't twins match. The best-dressed little Johnnies and Janes wear coats of the same goods and same style.

This means goods of regulation cut—the kind the youngsters can romp and tumble and scuff around in and really enjoy wearing.

To my way of thinking, when Sister steps out all ready for a good time in her swagger little greatcoat, she looks as attractive as Brother.

Of course, the material goes a long way toward meeting the durable requirements. Tweeds head the list of sturdy that come to my mind.

Herringbone worsted is another I like for the little folks.

Home-spun comes in heavy overcoating weights, too.

Chinchilla is an excellent choice for a coat that is to serve for both best wear and everyday.

In making your selection it is well to keep in mind that a rough-surfaced woolen is easier to mend than a smooth goods, such as twill, velour, and broadcloth.

Speaking of broadcloth brings me to what I call the "pretties" for the toddlers and little girls up to six years. I am thinking of the little coat, hat, leggings, and mitten outfits of white or pastel-colored broadcloth (pale blue, flesh color, or buff). These can be given a certain degree of durability by shrinking the goods thoroughly before it is made up so the outfit can be tubbed. "Inners" and linings must be washable too. Even a little girl's poke of this material can be made to snap to the foundation for easy laundering.

For cold weather the regulation coats are made double-breasted, with or without belts, with convertible collars and set-in sleeves or raglan shoulders. The cut is identical for boys and girls with one exception, the lap. The boys' coats lap left over right, and the girls' in the opposite way.

BIRTHDAY CANDLES. Sometimes it is a problem to know how to arrange the candles on a birthday cake when they number more than a dozen. Not everyone has an elaborate birthday cake board conveniently filled with candle sockets.

Here is a simple way that proves perfectly satisfactory: Choose a deep tray or platter of desired shape and size—a tin receptacle answers the purpose as well as any. Pour into it melted paraffin to a depth of an inch or more and just before the paraffin actually sets arrange the candles by thrusting their ends into the hardening wax. Have your plan well laid out and work quickly. In a few minutes the candles will be firmly set in place. When ready to serve arrange a doily on the space left in the centre of the platter for the cake and cover the edge the platter with greenery or crepe paper. The clear white wax is very attractive.

MORE USES FOR PAPER. The accumulation of large quantities of paper—daily, weekly and Sunday newspapers, wrapping paper and paper bags—in our house has prompted the discovery of every so many ways of saving work about the house.

First of all, establish a definite place for the storing of the three types of paper, and that within three steps of my working centre in the kitchen. On a hook very near to the stack of wrapping paper I hung a ball of stout cord. This grouping together of string and paper has saved countless minutes of hunting about when a parcel needed wrapping to be taken to town and father was in a hurry to start.

I also draw upon this supply for draining the excess fat from bacon, doughnuts, croquettes, and the like. The wire dish drainer with a lining of brown paper makes an excellent tool for this purpose.

Since we do not have electricity, floors must be cleaned with the broom.

or carpet sweeper and dustless mop. I carry a few newspapers with me on my morning rounds of the rooms. Some I use for spreading over articles to keep out dust and others make useful containers for the dust from the dust pan and carpet sweeper. They can be folded up, dust and all, placed in the waste basket and carried out.

When I begin to prepare a meal, I open a thick newspaper upon the kitchen table and confine my mixing and fixing to that space. There is no clatter of utensils on the table, no wiping up of drips and drops, and there is always a clean working surface, for when the uppermost paper is soiled it is quickly rolled up and placed in the basket.

Vegetables and fruit cleaning is not half bad when done on a paper-covered table, for then the tops or hulls may be disposed of without disturbing the appearance of the kitchen or porch in the least.

Paper bags, besides the numerous uses that suggest themselves, are convenient for sugaring doughnuts and even for flouring joints of chicken for frying, or for breadcrumbing cutlets, and the like.

Of course, the material goes a long way toward meeting the durable requirements. Tweeds head the list of sturdy that come to my mind.

Herringbone worsted is another I like for the little folks.

Home-spun comes in heavy overcoating weights, too.

Chinchilla is an excellent choice for a coat that is to serve for both best wear and everyday.

In making your selection it is well to keep in mind that a rough-surfaced woolen is easier to mend than a smooth goods, such as twill, velour, and broadcloth.

Speaking of broadcloth brings me to what I call the "pretties" for the toddlers and little girls up to six years. I am thinking of the little coat, hat, leggings, and mitten outfits of white or pastel-colored broadcloth (pale blue, flesh color, or buff). These can be given a certain degree of durability by shrinking the goods thoroughly before it is made up so the outfit can be tubbed. "Inners" and linings must be washable too. Even a little girl's poke of this material can be made to snap to the foundation for easy laundering.

For cold weather the regulation coats are made double-breasted, with or without belts, with convertible collars and set-in sleeves or raglan shoulders. The cut is identical for boys and girls with one exception, the lap. The boys' coats lap left over right, and the girls' in the opposite way.

BIRTHDAY CANDLES. Sometimes it is a problem to know how to arrange the candles on a birthday cake when they number more than a dozen. Not everyone has an elaborate birthday cake board conveniently filled with candle sockets.

Here is a simple way that proves perfectly satisfactory: Choose a deep tray or platter of desired shape and size—a tin receptacle answers the purpose as well as any. Pour into it melted paraffin to a depth of an inch or more and just before the paraffin actually sets arrange the candles by thrusting their ends into the hardening wax. Have your plan well laid out and work quickly. In a few minutes the candles will be firmly set in place. When ready to serve arrange a doily on the space left in the centre of the platter for the cake and cover the edge the platter with greenery or crepe paper. The clear white wax is very attractive.

MORE USES FOR PAPER. The accumulation of large quantities of paper—daily, weekly and Sunday newspapers, wrapping paper and paper bags—in our house has prompted the discovery of every so many ways of saving work about the house.

First of all, establish a definite place for the storing of the three types of paper, and that within three steps of my working centre in the kitchen. On a hook very near to the stack of wrapping paper I hung a ball of stout cord. This grouping together of string and paper has saved countless minutes of hunting about when a parcel needed wrapping to be taken to town and father was in a hurry to start.

I also draw upon this supply for draining the excess fat from bacon, doughnuts, croquettes, and the like. The wire dish drainer with a lining of brown paper makes an excellent tool for this purpose.

Since we do not have electricity, floors must be cleaned with the broom.

or carpet sweeper and dustless mop. I carry a few newspapers with me on my morning rounds of the rooms. Some I use for spreading over articles to keep out dust and others make useful containers for the dust from the dust pan and carpet sweeper. They can be folded up, dust and all, placed in the waste basket and carried out.

When I begin to prepare a meal, I open a thick newspaper upon the kitchen table and confine my mixing and fixing to that space. There is no clatter of utensils on the table, no wiping up of drips and drops, and there is always a clean working surface, for when the uppermost paper is soiled it is quickly rolled up and placed in the basket.

Vegetables and fruit cleaning is not half bad when done on a paper-covered table, for then the tops or hulls may be disposed of without disturbing the appearance of the kitchen or porch in the least.

Paper bags, besides the numerous uses that suggest themselves, are convenient for sugaring doughnuts and even for flouring joints of chicken for frying, or for breadcrumbing cutlets, and the like.

Of course, the material goes a long way toward meeting the durable requirements. Tweeds head the list of sturdy that come to my mind.

The Gift Of The Gods

BY FRANK FOLEY (Continued)

CHAPTER XIII.—(Cont'd.)

The nearness, the ecstasy of being with her again, the sudden joy of living that swept over him, was the only excuse for what followed.

They were seated in the shade of a huge flowering tree, whose great pink bell-shaped blossoms breathed out deep wafts of intoxicating odors. The blue sky overhead was reflected in the clear water before them; the swans were sailing majestically, calm and indifferent; the shadows were lengthening; a breeze crept up to them and white ripples in the soft folds of Tu Hee's mourning robe. The gold nail-shields were caught in the sun's rays and flashed warningly, menacingly, but to David they only added to the mysterious charm of the woman beside him. The world once more stood still for him, as it had the night in the sacred temple. Again that inexplicable, incomprehensible feeling all his years for just this moment.

Tu Hee drew away startled at what she saw in his face, but David had her hands in his.

"You ask me why I do this? Can you ask, Tu Hee? Can you not read my answer in my face, in my voice, in my eyes? Did you not guess that I ran away from—with my love for you—that if the sea and drove me back to your side?"

David's thoughts were all a jumble by this time. One coherent idea lodged firmly, clearly in his mind—he had told her! His heart sang jubilantly. Thank heaven, convention was strangled. He had told her! He laughed with the very ecstasy of the thought.

"Tu Hee, I love you. Come!" He held out his arms, but Tu Hee, her face as white as her gown, sprang to her feet, a trickle of cold sweat cooling his ardor, rose too, and confronted her.

He had lived with doubts, with fears that his great love might not be returned, but the wild joy of the past moment had obliterated everything but his own great love.

"You don't care, then?" His voice was dull, cold, then? "His voice was dull, cold, then?"

Tu Hee clasped and unclasped her hands feverishly. Her blue eyes, which his passion had compelled to meet his own, now glanced away, avoided his.

David stood there inwardly cursing himself. Like a fool he had treated his great love as a game of chance—had staked everything on one throw and had lost. More, he had lost what he had before possessed, her respect.

Tu Hee had turned her back on him now. Mechanically he picked up his hat from the grassy slope. Well, he deserved it. Apparently she did not care to even say good-bye. What was that? David wondered aloud.

Tu Hee's hands covered her face. It wasn't fancy then. It was a sob he had heard. In one stride David reached her side.

"Please forgive me." His voice was on feathers as up in the clouds, he contrite, pleading. "The wonder of being near you swept my reason away. I should have known better. I am going now. I won't ask you for your friendship—yet. I'll earn it."

Still Tu Hee did not move. Reluctantly David turned, but he saw he could move away his arms were caught in the clasp of fluttering white and gold-cased fingers. Soft lips were pressed against his hands; there was a whispering of silk, and something white darted past him and disappeared in the green of the shrubbery.

"This is a great old world, Ma Tu, isn't it?" The time was past midnight. David was leaning back viewing the rings of smoke from his cigar. Ma Tu was laying out his master's night paraphernalia, emitting a jocular chuckle at whatever his idol might say.

"I happy, too, Master Marsden. You happy gods, happy! Why, Ma Tu, I'm so jolly, madly happy, that I'm delirious, intoxicated."

"Toxice—that mean drunk"—another chuckle—"master lie—ah, no"—Ma Tu glanced up in quick consternation—"speak funny, that is the word—drunk mean wine-liquor—master not that."

"You're right, Ma Tu. It's not that. This is a heavenly drunkenness—a drunkenness from an elixir that gives strength to your muscles, clearness to your brain, and vim to your lagging energy. I envy Hercules no longer—I pity him."

"Tea hee!" "Here, stop that confounded tittering. Off to bed with you, you scamp. Do you think I'm a baby? Suffering humanity, you'll be rocking me to sleep next if I don't keep an eye on you."

"You, yu, a minute I go. Master's bed not punch quite—see I punch pillows—there—good night, sir."

"Good night, Ma Tu—you're worth all the gold of Midas."

A chuckle and the soft closing of the sitting-room door, and David was alone.

He sat eyeing his bed for half an hour. There was no earthly use of getting into it; he would never sleep. Would he ever be weary enough to sleep again? To think he was at last favored by the gods, he whom ill luck had dogged so long. David played down at his hand. His mind played him a queer trick then. Instead of Tu Hee he fancied his aunt was looking at him, favoring him with a spicy harangue on assinine man and his sentiment. A happy laugh was David's answer to this fanciful tirade, and he laid his face tenderly against the back of his hand.

The clock in his sitting-room sent in its mellow announcement that two a.m. was here.

David stretched in answer and mechanically unfastened his lounging robe.

"Might as well dream with my head on feathers as up in the clouds," he

The Canada-France Exposition Train

On July 16th the Canada-France Exposition Train, consisting of some 30 specially constructed motor coaches containing samples of Canadian manufactured goods and products of field, mine, forest and river, left Havre on its three-months' tour of France, the itinerary including stops at practically all important cities and terminating at Paris on October 8th.

It is to Senator Charles Beaubien of Montreal that the credit for this moving exposition of Canadian products must be given, and it is only after some years of constant work and propaganda that it was finally brought to fruition and the support of manufacturers and the Canadian and French Governments secured. Interviewed on the subject, Senator Beaubien is reported from Havre to have said:

"I do not ignore the fact that the operation of this exposition in France will take some years to bring results. Without doubt the war, which left its prelatid on many European countries, devalued the franc, but in spite of the tour exports to France are today superior by 400 per cent. to those of 1913, and at the end of its last fiscal year the United States had sold to France more than $220,000,000 of merchandise. If, thanks to this exposition train, we succeed in doubling our trade with France, our efforts will have brought about a novel propaganda in France which during six months will cause the name of Canada to be on the lips of Frenchmen in all parts of the Republic."

In a message from Premier the Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King to the French people, published in the French press, he expresses Canada's pleasure at the co-operation of the French Government, in the following words:

"Canada, in sending an exposition to France, takes, with pleasure, the occasion to reply to the bonne entente which exists between the two countries and to draw closer the bonds of friendship which unite them, entente and desire which was clearly demonstrated by the splendid exposition of French arts and industry which toured Canada in 1921.

The friendship which this exchange of visits inspires, augments and reinforces the mutual respect and admiration consecrated during the war on French soil by the common sacrifice of our glorious armies, will not be lessened by the occasion which offers to make known to each of us the products of the two countries.

"It is good, therefore, that Canada, of all the countries of the earth, which has known how to unite the descendants of those valiant men and the flags of France and Britain, and to make of their descendants a great nation, should now reinforce the bonds."

"The English and French in Canada have united, in the national life of the country, all the best traditions, the highest courage and other qualities which have come down to them from their antecedents. Canada was proud in 1921 to extend the warmest of welcomes to the French exposition train which visited the Dominion, and it is with the same spirit of friendship and perfect understanding that she now sends her exhibits to France."

The interest which the Canadian exposition train is creating in France is excellent. The public are thronging by the thousands to view the exhibits in the afternoons and by the tens of thousands in the evening. Pamphlets are being distributed, the natural resources of Canada explained, and everything possible done to convey to the French public a proper idea of Canada's greatness—what it is and what opportunity she offers for settlement, trade and manufacturing.

At each point where the train stops the delegation is officially welcomed by the civic authorities, there is a complimentary luncheon or dinner, a reception by the Chambre de Commerce and an official inspection of the exhibits.

Accompanying Senator Beaubien are Prof. H. Laureys, Director of the School of Higher Commercial Studies, Montreal; Dr. Aml. of Ottawa, Government expert on minerals; Mr. Georges Bouchard, M.P., Prof. of St. Anne de la Pocatiere Agricultural School; and Lieut.-Col. H. Barre, Canadian Commercial Agent at Paris. Thirty young Canadians, mostly students, are accompanying the train and giving their services free as lecturers.

At the conclusion of the tour the exhibits will be displayed in the Place de la Concorde, Paris, where the French Government have specially prepared a building in the Tuilleries

CHAPTER XIII.

David worked desperately to save the woman he loved, but his every effort seemed fang against a wall—a wall of superstition and prejudice. The Chinese officials listened to the foreigner amiably and politely, and after David thought he had at last drilled a ray of pity and reason into their hard heads and crusted hearts, he received a smile, a bow; yet their manners were flawless, these dark-skinned Orientals—and the sad assurance that the house of Wang Toy must suffer for the crime.

Sometimes David lost complete control of himself, and then when his diplomacy had feet and his threats were flung right and left, he was still smiling and politely but unmistakably informed he was a foreigner interfering in China's personal affairs. He engaged the services of an American lawyer, but alas, the affair wasn't international, and China remained stubbornly supreme.

Indeed, it seemed David's efforts had only brought more trouble on Tu Hee. She was now guarded by a cordon of spies. She could no longer walk in her gardens. One room was allotted to her; there she must stay a prisoner in her own house. Even David could gain no admittance now.

Pool, he called himself, to have attacked the enemy openly. Why had he not returned their polite indifference with smooth diplomacy? The way then would at least have been open for fight, whereas now Tu Hee was as much out of his reach as if she were already behind the prison bars that menaced her; and that last punishment might take place any hour now.

Gloomy and dejected he sat in his rooms one night. It was the end of the second day of his frantic but useless efforts on Tu Hee's behalf.

Ma Tu moved noiselessly about, afraid every moment he would be detected by his silent, morose master. Tu Hee had not dared to chuckle for the past twenty-four hours. Indeed, he had no occasion to; his heart was as downcast as his master's. All he could do was wait and watch like a faithful dog. He had spread his master's night clothes out on the bed, had pounded the pillows into downy softness, and then quietly slipped to the mat at the door, where he stretched himself out and waited. Through a crack in the slightly ajar door his bright eyes fastened themselves mournfully on the gloomy brow of his master.

David tossed aside the end of his ninth cigarette and drew another from the case, but he put it back again, jabbed the silver holder into his pocket and jerked himself from his chair. His jaw foot was a bit stiffer tonight. He shook it impatiently and started on a restless pacing up and down the room.

His face grew grimmer and darker; his lips were set in a tight, straight line; his jaw took on a savage, "giving" look. Impatiently he drew out his cigarette case, jabbed the tenth cigarette between his lips and threw himself into the chair again.

The clock chimed the quarter hour after midnight. At the same time a quick, sharp knock sounded; the sitting-room door was pushed open and Grace stepped into the room. Her cheeks were flushed, her eyes shone with excitement, and she was dressed for the street.

"Thank heaven, you are up. Quick, get your hat, don't sit there gaping, David dear. It's no nightmare. Do just as I say. I'll tell you later what it's all about."

"Is it Tu Hee? Good God, speak, is it?"

David had sprung to his feet and was roughly grasping Grace's arm. Grace winced and drew back. "Here, Ma Tu, bring your master's coat and hat, be quick!"

Ma Tu, who had been standing at attention from the moment the door opened, lost no time in doing her bidding.

As David took his place beside his cousin in the waiting car, he turned to her questioning.

"Yes, it's Tu Hee. The messenger brought the word to my apartment first. All I could make out was that someone was dying."

David's face went gray. "No no it's not Tu Hee. A servant. I don't know what it's all about, but we'll soon know."

(To be continued.)

ROYAL BRAND KETCHUP

SOLVED. Tomato: At last I have solved the mystery of my poor brother's disappearance.

If the good die young how do you account for bald-headed editors?

After Every Meal A natural candy that benefits everybody. Aids digestion, cleanses the bowels, soothes the throat.

WRIGLEYS a good thing to remember

THE FLAVOR LASTS

His Name. A young man was boasting about the conquests he had gained over the feminine heart.

AND THOSE WHO DO NOT. He: Men understand women pretty well. She: Yes; all except two kinds of men. He: And what are they? She: The married men and the bachelors.

Oysters can only live in water that contains at least thirty-seven parts of salt to every one thousand parts of water.

Minard's Liniment for Dandruff. Bees will eat moistened sugar if necessary, but prefer the nectar of flowers.

Universal Folding Bath Tub for Town & Country Homes

A pure white enameled metal bath tub, with or without instantaneous water heater. Gives all bathing facilities of city homes. No plumbing required. When not in use, folds up out of the way. Mounted on castors, can be moved anywhere. Moderate price and lasts a lifetime. Write for folder and trial offer, also information on Indoor Chemical Closets.

UNIVERSAL METAL PRODUCTS CO.
Assumption St., Walkerville, Ont.

RAW FURS WANTED

Highest Prices Paid for Skunk, Coon, Mink, Fox, Deer-Skins, Hides, Calfskins, &c.

Ship to Canadian Hide & Leather Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

Bale Your Hay

Strong Wire-Quick Delivery Laidlaw Bales excel

The Laidlaw Bale Co., Hamilton, Canada

EDDY'S MATCHES

Always Ask For

Sold by over 14,000 General Stores and 16,000 Grocers

ON SALE EVERYWHERE IN CANADA

Bovril makes you feel ten years younger

Halifax, N.S. have been spe to improve co Halifax for h Non bushel g built to replac one.

Quebec, Q wages p Ville Marie, B five hundred mostly in O leave here sh Ontario borde ord number o one time for fority are ta The young m farms in the Cornwall, O Ltd., of Lond the largest m silk in the w acres on the b river at Corr erecting a r business. Al employed, ha Brandon, M ber of the B ing to their get men for information p ment bur ed for fall p monthly was enough to fil Regina, S the best she Great Brita

IMPERIAL BENEFIT Achieve Empire

A despatch Another Im passed into Conference m the considera munications, probably b purposes bot cluded their weeks of cons mittees, conf

What has b Sunday will resolutions be forecast that any organie relations; im proposals of pear to have at all.

In matters is no change i As seen fro view the resu summed up b adian delegat 1. A multio the Canadian relations.

2. Recognit pendent initia to one part with willinge ters of comm 3. The clea position of th to making tr mous understa lines adopted lments from t to the Hallibu

4. Recognit the first time minion naved. 5. Emphas of each part of defence. 6. Recognit Parliament an the Empire to of its own defe These conce

In the Econo gains to Cana erence, in th result of the Canadian ship tain will be fr tion on profits. In the proba British Govern tion of regulat adian settle an

Eruption of Miles off C

A despatch says: Causid strata in the phenomenon is recently near a geyser sur from the sea, and during tw spurted at a throwing off str eruption was on the spot a after the quak

London Fog Damag

A despatch fr the season of here are recalli to them and They keep su city dwellers, de tries of soot b thing, and a str costs the capita laundring and i