ENGLAND WILL SUPPORT CANADIAN ENTERPRISES

Before leaving England recently after a short visit to that country, E. W. Beatty, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway said "I cannot help but regard Canada as the greatest actual potential asset in the Empire, and when exchange is at parity I feel quite confident that England will support Canadian enterprises and Canadian development will be very extensive." The photograph reproduced above shows Sir Thomas Fisher, general manager, Canadian Pacific Steamships, (left); Sir George McLaren Brown, European General Manager of the Canadian Pacific, Mr. Beatty and Captain J. Turnbull, commander of the Montaurier.

said lay almost the future of Canada. All the young people were under their charge. It was their mission to educate them—"to learn the young idea how to shoot." But they had to do more than that. They had to build, or at least lay the foundations, of these young children's characters, and fit them out for the battle of life. That surely was an all-important task, and because of that their visit to old Scotland was doubly welcome, for there was nothing made a stronger appeal to Scotsmen more than good education. (Applause.) He sincerely hoped that they would enjoy their trip to Scotland and that it would inspire them to read its great history, which they would find interesting indeed, and that they would arrive back in their homes enriched in mind by their visit to Scotland. (Loud applause.)

Achbishop Matheson, who was called upon to reply, said he felt he was the wrong man to give expression of their appreciation for the warm welcome Provost Wilson, as representing Kilmarnock, had accorded to them that afternoon. And he felt this for two reasons. The first was that they had with them Major Ney, the man who originated the Over-Seas League and developed it with such wondrous success. The Major, then, undoubtedly was the man for the job that he (Bishop Matheson) was now reluctantly undertaking. Another reason why he felt he was the wrong man was because everybody who met him recognized that he was a Scotsman, and had a warm expectation that he was a good Presbyterian. (Laughter and applause.) But he would remind them that Archbishops were not always Presbyterians. He noticed when he came to this side of the water that Bishops and their gaiters were regarded as something of a curiosity (Laughter.) That reminded him of a story of an Achbishop who, dressed in black gaiters, was passing down a street not long ago—the observed of all observers. Said one man to his friend, "What is that on the other side of the street?" "Dinna ye ken?" replied the other. "Why, that's a Highlandman in mourning." (Laughter.) Well, he was not a Highlandman in mourning, although he was a Highlandman. Their worthy Provost had made reference in his speech to the great colonizing qualities of Scotsmen, and he was proud to acknowledge that he was a descendant of one of those early colonizers of Red River Settlement before it was known as Manitoba, when it was 2000 miles away from railways. Lord Selkirk was the gentleman who brought out these people to Canada from Sutherlandshire, and they had proved great pioneers. They travelled thousands of miles to plant solidly a colony of the British Empire. (Applause.) But it must always be remembered, continued the Archbishop Matheson, that these courageous men had terrible difficulties to contend against. In these early pioneering days rival companies were fighting with each other, and time and again these early settlers were forced to flee down the river. But, like the fearless Scotsmen they were, they had stuck to their task and demonstrated the great future of Western Canada—(applause)—by building up a great colony, which today stood unrivalled in the history of Canada. He was proud to belong to the Scottish nation, and glad to be in Kilmarnock that afternoon, for it was lovely for those of them with Scottish blood in their veins to have revived historic memories of Old Scotland and to visit these scenes reverent with memories of great events in the past. Just that day they had journeyed through Burns' country, and he had bought a copy of Burns' works and had read some of them on his way back. Burns had thrilled him. He was not like that American who, when being driven in a carriage through the scenes associated with the great poet's life was being repeatedly told by a native all the favorite places frequented by Burns: "That is the church in which Burns worshipped." "That's where Burns was born." "That's where he used to meet his cronies." All this was told the American, who getting impatient at the recital, shouted out, to the consternation of his guide, "And who in the name of thunder was Burns?" "Hoot, man," replied the guide, "have ye no read your Bible?" (Laughter.) Archbishop Matheson again thanked the Provost for the warm welcome extended to them—a welcome which he described as coming from a warm Scottish heart. ((Applause.))

The company thereafter re-entered the large fleet of charabancs lined up on the other side of John Finnie St. and before taking their departure
