SHOOTERS BEWARE

Under a recent amendment to the Fishery and Game Act, a heavy penalty is provided for carrying a loaded gun in a motor car—loaded meaning with shells in the magazine.

TWO MINUTE SILENCE

The usual Armistice Day two-minute silence will be observed on Tuesday, November 11th, at 11 o'clock, throughout the British Empire. This is in addition to the observance of Armistice Day and Thanksgiving on Monday, November 10th, in Canada.

THE RESCUER PAID

Here is a real radio drama. It was tragic for William J. Hardman, of West New York, N. J., who says: "Last summer I went to my summer home in Willimantic, Conn. One evening my wife rushed in from the veranda, and exclaimed: 'Bill! there's something wrong with the Grants.'"

"The Grants were our neighbors. In a moment I heard a voice raised in anger coming from the darkened house. It became louder and angrier. My wife, nervous and excitable, clung to my arm. A woman's voice, raised in a shrill scream of terror, brought the vocal battle to a sudden end. 'Do something, Bill. He'll kill her,' begged my wife."

"I rushed into our house and procured an old pistol. I ran across the lawn between the two houses, and noiselessly mounted the steps of the Grant home. I tried the door. It was open. Stealthily I made my way through the hall into the parlor. The darkness and silence were provocative. Slowly I moved forward until I reached the portieres separating the parlor and living-room. Then I peeked in. What a beautiful sight I saw. An astronomer would have revelled in the innumerable stars and comets I beheld."

"Fifteen minutes later the brilliant stars faded, and I found myself reclining on a couch looking into the faces of Mr. and Mrs. Grant."

"What happened?" I inquired, tenderly rubbing an egg-shaped lump on the top of my head.

"Grant explained he had mistaken me for a burglar when he heard me prowling around, and tapped me on the head with a log of wood. What my wife and I had mistaken for a family feud was more easily explained. Grant was an ardent radio fan. What we had heard was the first act of the drama 'The Woman Pays,' being broadcast by WGY."
