PART TALES REPOLD IN

prettiest girl that ever got her picture curred the enmity of her sisters, as well as of her mother, who forced her to do all the housework and thereby solved the servant problem, which, as everyone knows, is quite vexing. Things were at this pass until the time for a big blowout arrived; and when Cindy's invite to attend the ball never arrived, she cried her heart out just as if she were watching one of those Norma Talmadge heartbrearkers

Presently there came a rap at the door. It was a fairy. Cindy was much relieved. She thought surely it would be the landlord after the renu In jig time Cinderella was newly gowned, her hair marcelled and her eyebrows penciled. A "lowest rate" taxi whisked her away with the admonition of the fairy not to tarry beyond the stroke of twelve ringing in her ears.

Cinderella had a grand old time. She danced with a Czecho-Slovakian Prince and some good looking movi? stars; but, as was to be expected, she overstayed her time. The clock struck twelve while she was dancing with the prince; and Cindy dashed out, leaving a slipper behind-for identification purposes. Wise virgin!

"Whoever can get her dogs into this shoe," announced the Prince, "I will wed." He knew full well it would fit only Cinderella. Prince!

Well, Sarsaparella and Umbrella tried to squeeze their tootsies into the small slipper—to no avail. Then the Prince insisted that they send for Cinderella. It fitted her snugly, just as if it had been made to order at a swell shop. "Will you be mine?" asked the

"Not on your life," said Cinderella: "I just read an Associated Press report that there was a rervolution in your country and that a republic is going to be established. Besides, I'm a 100 percent American." The Prince pulled a master stroke.

'I am glad to hear you speak like that, Cindy," he said. "Most people have wanted to marry me only for
