ON PARLIAMENT HILL

The British North America Act, as amended in the Special Session of the House at the opening of the session, for the purpose, particularly, of effecting some reform of the Senate. Neither of these moves would conceivably be made if the Government had in mind making into a general election at the conclusion of the present session. Again, as was pointed out in the House this week by Gen. W. Kyte, Chief Government Whip, it does not look like a pre-election session when the Conservatives have insisted to call a single sitting of the Public Accounts Committee to investigate any of the expenditures of the present Government since it came into power nearly four years ago. Despite protestations of various Conservative speakers in the Budget debate nothing is more certain than that the official Opposition does not want an election this year. And it is doubtful if any section of the country wants the expense and turmoil of an election until the expiry of the regular constitutional time in the autumn of next year.

REFUTES BLUE-RUIN TALK

An important contribution to the Budget debate in the week just closed was that of Hon. James Murdock, Minister of Labor, who read into the records some convincing evidence of the falsity of the blue-ruin cries of the Conservatives both in the House and out of it. He showed that unemployment was worse in the United States than in Canada; that the alleged list of failures in Canada as prepared by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and quoted from freely by Mr. Meighen was sadly inaccurate and full of indications of padding to suit the purposes of those who are demanding higher protection. He showed, too, that a great deal had been actually accomplished by the present Government in reducing the cost of living, and produced official statistics to support his contention. He concluded with a warm rebuff to Sir Henry Drayton and the mock efforts of that former Minister of Finance toward revising the tariff. Sir Henry was responsible for a costly tour of Canada by the tariff commission after telling the country that a tariff revision was long overdue. Then when much money had been spent in travelling over the Dominion again told the people and Parliament that that revision would not be put into effect.

"Did you ever hear tell of crawling?" Is not that as fine an example of it as anyone ever heard?" asked Mr. Murdock, "and it emanates from men who have the nerve to get up here on the floor of this House and charge this Government with this, that and every other thing. In other words, the Tory party did not have the nerve to make the changes in the tariff that their friends wanted, because they knew the people of Canada would not stand for it, and now they are continually finding fault with this Government because it has not done so, and does not propose to do so."

INDEPENDENT MEMBER SUPPORTS BUDGET

A recognition of the benefits the Kobb fiscal policy had conferred and would confer upon the province of British Columbia was voiced in the speech by J. W. ... in support of the Budget program of the present session and commended his attitude toward it in his concluding paragraph as follows: "It is my intention to support the Budget at this particular time, and in doing so I feel that I am carrying out my duty to my constituency and to the country. I do not want to have it inferred that I am in any way governed by political influences. But I believe that it is in the best interests of the country that the Budget should be supported, although I know that some of my friends with whom I associate at the present time do not agree with this view. It must be remembered, however, that conditions in the province from which I come are extremely different from those in other parts of the country; it has been recognized as a concession to myself and other members from British Columbia that we have certain conditions there that do not exist anywhere else. For this and other reasons that I have stated I shall have no hesitation in giving what support I can to the Budget."

NO LOW-TARIFF MAN NEED APPLY

Showing the sail-trimming of the Conservatives when in office on tariff matters and warmly replying to their strictures of the expenditures of $4,200 last summer on the Parliamentary party of three which went as representatives of Canada to the Wembley Exhibition, Geo. W. Kyte, the Chief Government Whip and a veteran Nova Scotia member of the House, delivered a convincing, as well as highly entertaining, speech on Thursday night. In defending his opposition to the Conservative proposal to appoint a Tariff Board in 1912, while supporting a similar proposal by the present Government this session, Mr. Kyte declared that he would not entrust the establishment of such a Board to the Conservatives for no low tariff men would have a chance of appointment to that Board, whereas with a divergence of tariff views in the present Liberal Government and party there was a much greater probability of the views of the whole country being consulted in the establishment of such a Board.

UNITY IN WEAKNESS

A telling reply to the oft-repeated boast of the Conservatives of the unanimity in their party on tariff matters and to their taunt of a wide divergence of opinion in the Liberal party on the same question was made by Mr. Kyte in answering particularly the remarks of Hon. Dr. R. J. Manion (Fort William and Rainy) Mr. Kyte, "should be slow to boast of a unanimity on the tariff. We always find the maximum of unanimity in a minimum of numbers and, inasmuch as the hon. gentleman places so much value upon the virtue of unanimity he has the consolation of knowing that just in the proportion that the Conservative group in this House continues to decrease in numbers so it will increase in unanimity." He declared and proved that high protection as an issue had never been a general election and for that reason Mr. Meighen showed more courage than discretion in seeking to make it as issue in the next contest.
