A FEW STORIES.

Scottie Feared the Minister More Than the King.
Here is a yarn about the king which will be new to most readers, and which disproves a current notion that British religionists have lost the idea of church discipline.

A church near Balmoral Castle where his majesty was enjoying a holiday had just received a new minister, and there was a local bad man—a poacher and so forth—who had seen neither the minister nor the king.

One Sunday morning the king happened to be walking along the bank of the Dee when he saw the poacher fishing for salmon. The king stopped and said: "You must know that you've no right here. For one thing, this is preserved water; and for another, this is Sunday."

The poacher waddled through the water and, peering upwards, asked: "Who are you?"

The king smiled. "Oh, I'm the king," he said.

The fisherman was instantly relieved. "Man, what a fright ye gave me!" he exclaimed. "I thought ye were the new minister."

For some reason or another that story brings to mind that idyl of a Bishop of London who was driven home one night, and when he arrived at Fulham Palace gave the cabman only the two shillings the law allowed.

The cabman looked at them more in sorrow than in anger, and, being an evangelical person, said: "St. Paul would not have given me this." "No," said the bishop, "you would only have had a shilling, because he would have been at the Archbishop's Palace at Lambeth."

It was Archbishop Temple, once a Bishop of London, who was alleged to have made a since celebrated remark about Providence to a bore who tackled him on the subject. The said bore had an aunt who went one day to a railway station and, by some lock in the traffic, failed to catch a train which was subsequently wrecked with many casualties.

"Do you not regard that," said the bore to Dr. Temple, "as a marvellous interposition of Providence?" to which Temple replied, with his usual unique and perfect air of candor, "I really could not say because, you see, I have never met your aunt."

Of another church dignitary Cardinal Manning, it is told, that once at a public dinner he found himself beside the Jewish Chief Rabbi. The latter, it being one of the Jewish feasts, ate scarcely anything.

Said Manning, feelingly: "You are taking nothing. Must you never eat him, Dr. Adler?" "I will break my rule," said the chief rabbi, "at your eminence's wedding."

Marriage-Broker in Mesopotamia.
Marriage-brokers are to be met with throughout the world, and their methods are very much the same everywhere; that they serve a useful purpose is self-evident.

Mrs. E. S. Stevens, in her book, "By Tigris and Euphrates," tells how her man servant, knowing no outblight in Baghdad, as he was a stranger, employed three dealers or marriage-brokers, one man and two women.

"They found him a likely girl, and on the appointed day he went to her house with one of the brokers and his friends. He was allowed to see and talk with his prospective bride, and the dowry was discussed. He had never seen the girl until that moment. I asked him what he said to her. He replied: 'She sat on a chair and I sat on a chair near her. I asked her if it was true she knew English, and she said, 'Yes, she knew a little English.' We talked together a little in English, and then I asked her what her dowry was. She said 'Three thousand rupees.' I said 'That is not enough; I want six thousand.'"

"Eventually, after much chaffing, the dowry was fixed at four thousand rupees, to which another thousand was added for marriage expenses. Everyone drank coffee, the women uttered joyous cries, a band played for the occasion, made the usual euphony, and the matter was settled, the rabbi making the formal betrothal—which is as binding as marriage. Fees were, of course, paid to the rabbi and deldars. My servant did not pay the deldars (only five rupees backshish), his father-in-law paid such expenses. Such was the account given to me, and making due allowances for the probable inflation of figures, it serves to show that romance is not to the fore in these transactions of the common people."

Beating the World.
Britain will possess the longest tunnel in Europe, if not in the whole world, when the scheme for carrying the waters of Loch Treig and Loch Laggan to a hydro-electric station at Fort William has been completed.

The new tunnel is to be driven under Ben Nevis, and will have to be blasted all the way through solid rock and granite. The excavations will proceed from both ends and from shafts sunk from the surface, and after admitting to the tunnel from either side. In places the tunnel will run 2,000 feet under the mountains. It is to be fifteen miles in length, of two and a half miles longer than the Simplon.

CONSULTING THE ORACLE.

People of Tibet Have Unquestioning Faith in the Oracles.
Stupid in ignorance and superstition, the people of Tibet have an unquestioning faith in the oracles that are established in their midst, and rely on them for advice and guidance in every occurrence of their daily life.

The principal soothsayer in Tibet is the State Oracle of Nejung, who has a sumptuous residence near Lhasa city and a retinue of over a hundred monks for his service.

He is considered on all matters of State and without his favorable recommendation no undertaking is begun.

He is required to draw up an annual forecast of events, and, as a matter of fact, he frequently gives extraordinary correct prophecies.

His services are also at the disposal—for a consideration—of persons of rank and wealth in Lhasa. His lesser brethren are scattered throughout the country, and in any undertaking, whether important or trivial, are first consulted by their local adherents.

The oracle dominates the lives of the Tibetans from birth to death; he prescribes them in sickness and advises them in health.

No Tibetan would think of beginning an undertaking without first consulting his local oracle as to an auspicious time for carrying it out. The oracle decides the time and place of their burial ceremonies, and finally arranges for the starting of the released soul on its journey towards Nirvana.

For all these services the oracle must, of course, be paid, and he accordingly traps an excellent harvest both in cash and in kind. By prescribing on every possible occasion some form of religious ceremony, he puts money into the hands of the lamas, with whom, of course, he is hand-in-glove.

The procedure when an oracle is consulted is as follows:

The aspirant for information, having stated the object of his inquiry and paid the necessary fees to the attendant lama, is led before the oracle, who is seated on a high chair, clad in gorgeous silken robes. He holds a long sword in his right hand and a spear or some other weapon in his left.

The attendant whispers the applicant's request, whereupon the oracle begins to tremble, and in a few minutes works himself into a frenzy at the base of his body.

During the height of the seizure the oracle gasps out cryptic words and disjointed phrases which are interpreted to the seeker after knowledge by the attendant lama.

The replies are usually couched in terms capable of more than one meaning.

The Cannon.
Gibben, in his great work, "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," describes a cannon employed by the Turkish Sultan, Mahomet II., at the siege of the city of Adrianople in the year 1453.

But there are records of still earlier cannon. It is stated that cannon were used by the Moors in Spain in 1343, and that the English King, Edward III., had four pieces of cannon at his great victory at Crecy in France in 1346.

The English had cannon at the siege of Calais in the following year; and the Venetians employed cannon against the Genoese at sea in 1377.

The cannon used by Edward III., at Crecy were probably made in what is now Belgium, for the first cannon made in England was cast by a man named Ruggat, at Uckfield, Sussex, in 1348.

An old cannon, famous in its time for its size, is "Mons Meg," preserved in Edinburgh Castle. It is about 18 feet long, with a calibre of 30 inches. It is said to have been cast at Mons in Belgium in 1446, but it is more probable that it was forged at Dundee, Douglas, Galloway, Scotland, by three brothers named McKim, and presented by them to James II., at the siege of Thrieve Castle in 1455.

It was removed to London in 1754, when George II. was on the throne. There was an agitation in Scotland for the return of the cannon, and it was carried to success by Sir Walter Scott, the famous poet and novelist. Mons Meg was, therefore, restored to Edinburgh Castle in 1829, in the last year of the reign of George IV.

Wales, the Home of Music.
The annual Eisteddfod, or musical competition had its origin in the twelfth century. The great national festival was held at Cardigan, and was organized under the patronage of Lord Rees. Two "chairs" were then given, one for the best bard and one for the best player on the harp, violin, or lute. The musicians' prize on that occasion went to a South Wales man, but the winning bard came from the North. The same distinction usually holds good to-day.

The Eisteddfod movement reached its zenith at Caerwys in 1524. After that assembly Welsh national spirit declined considerably, and no Eisteddfod on a national scale was held from 1631 until the festival was revived after the Napoleonic Wars.

Money Went Further.
Although so often spoken of as "gloomy," Dean Inge can be genuinely funny upon occasion.

For instance, he recently made a party of Americans at a luncheon laugh very heartily by a reference to George Washington.

He recalled that the founder of the United States never told a lie, but had declared that he once threw a dollar across the estuary of the Potomac.

"I have seen the river," said the dean, "but," he added, "of course, we must remember that money went much further in those days."

Londoners are living, on an average, twenty years longer than their grandfathers did eighty years ago.

PERSONAL NOTES

Mr. and Mrs. W. Weidrick on Sunday. The hosts and guests were visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Benn, Springvale in the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Pollock and family spent the week-end at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Parkinson.

Miss Bertha Parsons, nurse in training at the General hospital, Hamilton, was home one day this week.

Miss Dora Draper, of Caledonia, returned to her home on Monday evening after spending a week at the parsonage.

Margaret and Lorene Biggar, of Mt. Hope, spent the week-end with their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Shaver.

"Why don't you get more young men to train for positions stenographers?" The question is frequently asked by the Principal of the Simcoe Business College, Miss MacMahon, the head of the Employment Department of the United Typewriter Company in Toronto. Young men, here is your opportunity.

Mrs. James Fryatt was taken to St. Joseph's hospital, Hamilton, on Tuesday. We are glad to report she is doing nicely.

The W. M. S. of Wesley United church will meet at the home of Mrs. Henry Johnson on Tuesday, August 18th, at 3 p.m.

Mrs. Jas. Hewitt entertained a few friends on Wednesday for her sister, Miss Lizzie Rodgers, before she returned to Toronto.

If in doubt as to what to do with your future, call in to see H. Bowden, Principal of the Simcoe Business College. He will give you the benefit of his more than 20 years' experience. You will not obligate yourself in any way.

The bridge building gang which have been working at the local station here during the past few weeks left on Tuesday for Renton and Delhi.

A real treat is in store for all when Miss Myrtle Hare, contralto soloist of Central Baptist church, Toronto, will sing in the Jarvis Arena on Friday night, Aug. 14th.

Mrs. Fred Harrison, of Hamilton, Miss Edith Hind, of Ottawa, and the Misses Olive Wilton and C. Quance, of Hagersville, visited at the home of Miss Leonora Allen on Monday.

While some professions are overcrowded at the present time, there is always a demand for educated, thoroughly trained stenographers and secretaries. If you have had two, three or four years' High School training, the Simcoe Business College can give you the opportunity that Business offers you. Business today offers the greatest opportunities.

AUGUST ROD AND GUN

In addition to a full quota of unusually interesting stories and articles, the August number of "Rod and Gun in Canada," the Canadian sportsman's magazine, contains a wealth of information for the outdoorsman, the fisherman and the gun crank in the regular articles and full synopses of the hunting and fishing seasons and laws for the province of Canada and Newfoundland. It also includes the announcement of the annual amateur photographic contest in which $700 in prizes is being awarded.

Among the stories of general sporting interest, Basswood Lake to Windigo, an account of a canoe trip, which while it recounts the second part of the voyage, is a complete story, written in a swinging narrative; Side lights of Nipigon talks of trout fishing and is written by Orank Ripley, who wields a rod even better than a very finished pen. Judge A. E. Cohn of Toledo, O., is enthusiastic for Canada as a sportsman's paradise in recounting his moose hunting experiences at Temiskaming under the caption A Judge Goes Hunting.

Other articles equally good contribute to make the issue a highly attractive one.

"Rod and Gun in Canada" is published monthly by W. J. Taylor, Ltd., Woodstock, Ont.
