ON PARLIAMENT HILL

...in summing up the debate for the Conservatives and in attacking the Government, declared that the surplus claimed by the Liberals this year was fictitious and was connected solely for the purpose of making headlines in the newspapers. He recapitulated the debt on account of the Canadian National Railways and denounced the maintenance of a separate Colonization branch of that road when the Department of Immigration and Colonization at Ottawa was ample to do the work. In his concluding sentences he said the Government substituted excuses and promises of revival of trade for any concrete policy which would extricate Canada from its great financial difficulties. The Conservative member, he pointed out, called for a reduction in taxes, particularly of those taxes which have directly on the average citizen. They were, he said, not one Progressive member in the House who had not advocated the same thing, and "honestly Mr.
Meighen unintentionally disclosed the reason for the curious wording of the amendment. It was designed to catch Progressive support by calling for lower taxes, while at the same time it called for a higher tariff which is a tax, too. "This time," added Mr.
Meighen, "the people are going to find out whether the Progressive are interested only in continuing this Government in office or in application of sound principles to government."

PRIME MINISTER REVIEWS GOVERNMENT'S RECORD

The Prime Minister's review of the Government's record, his summary of fiscal policy and of what had been achieved in the way of reducing expenditures and taxation was undoubtedly one of his finest efforts in Parliament. He noted that during the year 1921-22, the last of the Conservative Administration, total expenditure on Government expenses had been $464,000,000, or $51.77 per head. During the last fiscal year it had been $350,000,000 (revised figures), or $37.51 per head. For every $4.00 that had been spent in 1921-22, the Government was now spending $3.00. A similar ratio held with regard to taxation. His concluding summary of achievement brought a great demonstration from his followers. "Let me conclude with these words," he said, "in the short time that we have been in office of some three years or more we have reduced the public debt. We have reduced taxation, the cost of living and the cost of the public service. More than that, we are able to point to a vast increase in the trade of the country, to the growing of national unity, to an improvement in our credit, as witness the circumstance that today the Canadian dollar is quoted at a premium in New York. Having regard to all these circumstances, I think the Government is entitled, at least from hon. gentlemen, who have promised honest co-operation where the Government sought to serve the country's interest, to support of the Budget which it has brought down at this session."
