GOLD PRODUCTION IN CANADA

The production of gold for the year 1924 as reported by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, showed an output of 1,525,380 fine ounces valued at $31,-532,402, an increase of 2.4 per cent above the total of the previous year. The production in 1924 was the greatest in the history or Canada. In the year 1900 when the production of the Yukon placers was at its height, the total lode and placer gold produced in Canada was 1,350,057 ounces valued at $27,908,153.

Huge Whiskey Trust

"Absolute masters of the distillation and distribution of Scotch whiskey throughout the world" is the toothsome phrase applied to the Distillers Company, a British organization that excites our respectful interest. It is the new owner of Johnny Walker, Dewar's, Haig's and other famous distilling firms. In short, it is the name of the Scotch whiskey trust that has been established, and to which every seriously ill Canadian pays a royalty every time he fills a prescription for the the property owned by the new company amounts to about $200,000,000. which includes some $0,000,000 gallone of proof spirits. The amalgamation of the leading distillers was the alternative to a fight for the American market which, we are informed by Claire Price in the New York Times, now demands some quality with the liquor it imports. In the autumn of 1924 it seemed likely that Dewar, Buchanan and Walker would fight for the market, but a few conferences resulted in an agreement to amalgamate. The businesses will be carried on under separate names as heretofore, and perhaps the distinctive quality of the old brands may be retained, but the profits will go to the combine. For some years past the whisker situation in the Old Country has been an interesting one. The war resulted in a high duty and the curtailment of the home demand, the prohibition of distillation, and the war-time prohibition in other countries seriously cut down consumption. Then the Immature Spirits Regulation which required new spirits to spend three years in bond brought about a serious shortage of old matured spirits. There followed a furious scramble to buy up stocks of old liquor which reached its height in 1919. In this year, too, an increased demand from the United States was set up. The machinery for smuggling, presumably, was working well, and despite the fact that it was illegal for liquor to be bought in the United States, the distillers learned that they could count upon demand there as surely as though it had been in a neighboring country not under a prohibition law. > To-day the situation is that the smand for whiskey at home is declining while it is increasing abroad. In 1924 there were exported 8,370, 000 gallons, an increase from 5,700,-000 in 1922. Of the liquor exported 1,100,000 came to Canada, 1,400,000 dies, 425,000 to New Zealand and about $,500,000 to "other countries." The "other countries," known to the whiskey trade also as the "scheduled area," turn out to be nothing but the well-known United States of Amerien, and includes Mexico, the West Indies and the Bahamas, which are recognised by the liquor dealers as ports of call on the journey to Uncie Sam's long gullet. Statistics of the English Board of Trade indicate that in 1922 the scheduled area took 26 per cent. of the total export of English gin and Scotch whiskey, and in 1924, 41 per cent. In other words, every twenty-four hours there pours into this area, that is to say, mainly into the United States, 11,775 proof gallone of spirite.

Earl Haig is the best-known m connected with the distillers' combine. He is chairman of John Haig & the Distillers Company. Unlike some of his colleagues, he made his name illustrious as a general and not as a distiller, though it is honorably known in that connection also. Lord Woolsvington is the best known of the whiskey barons, with the exception of Haig. he is renowned as a important racing stables in England. Lord Woolavington was born in Canthe borders of Perthshire and entered the grain business. From that to the and he soon succeeded in putting on the market a blend that captured the popular taste.
