At this point, the sun, at one time of the year, does not set for several weeks; at another it does not rise for several.

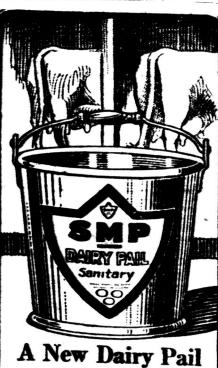

At last, on the proper day, according to the almanac, it shows its face. Afterwards, it remains for ten or twenty minutes, then goes down, and at length does not set at all, but makes an almost perfect circle around the sky, in full view.

At North Cape, during the time the sun does not set, the inhabitants tell that it is 12 o'clock at night by seeing the sun rise over the mountains. In Stockholm, the sun, in June, sets a short space before 10 o'clock. During the night, it is very light, owing to the passage of the sun around the earth toward the North Pole, and people can see to read at midnight.

At the head of the Gulf of Bothnia there is a mountain, where, on the 21st of June. the sun does not set at all. This happens only on that night. The sun touches the horizon, but does not sink below it; in five minutes, it be-
