Tunnel Unearthed on Site of Palace of Henry VIII.

London.—A subterranean passage Tells Story of Having Been of London.

It is thought the passage connected the two royal palaces and was used for purposes not revealed by history. The distance from Weybridge to Hampton Court is about six miles. There is also an ancient cellar, and both this and the passage are surmounted by chiseled arches.

These discoveries have revived rumors concerning a buried treasure belonging to one of Henry VIII's wives, Anne of Cleves. Jewels were stolen by a servant during her stay at Oatlands Palace, as it was called, and, when the thief was discovered, were buried on the estate and never found.
