Rain and the Moon. Near the equator the position of the young moon never makes an angle of more than 30 degrees with the horison, and it is generally in an even more nearly horizontal position, so that in a part of the world notorious for regions of heavy rainfall, the moon is, according to the proverb, always a "dry" one. The final absurdity of the idea that changes in the moon denote rain is the case of the crescent moon, as seen from the North and South poles, where it is always what the proverb describes as "wet," for at those places the line joining the in the form of rain and snow that they rank among the arid regions of the

We scuffed through windrows of crisp ash leaves, smelling their clean odor, and turned up a soft lane where juncos were fitting and twittering in the grass and two downy woodpeckers scratching in an apple-tree. Suddenly we walked into a hill-side field, etched round with a thin line of trees. One oak stood, a true symbol of strength, in the centre. Sumachs on one side glowed with a vivid color, and down the valley to the next hill, washed with the faint blue of the haze, were innumerable patches of color in glorious array.

The lane now dipped downhild through a heavily wooded patch. Juncos and woodpeckers were busy in here also, and some other birds with a throaty, crooning note. We did not recognize them instantly as bluebirds; they seemed too unlike the with scarcely a wing motion. Too far away for us to identify positively they were supposedly red-tailed hawks, se # to be common to this country. The lane stopped at a stone wall on the edge of a grassy pasture. "Look!" cried Edgar as I clambered over the wall. I turned quickly and saw a procession of small grey birches well up towards the hill-top, a far sweep of newly-minted gold. So came the riches of nature at the close of a wellspent season.-J. Brooks Ackinson, in "Skyline Promenades."

A friend wanted me to try your medicine-Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and I took it steadily for a year. During this time I was carrying my second baby and I felt real well all the time and did not have a hard confinement. I feel sure the Vegetable Compound did me a lot of good, and all my people do, too. One sister in Learnington, Ontario, takes it, and both sisters praise it as a good medicine. I am more than pleased with the result." - Mrs. W. PENN. Windsor, Ontario.
