TRAFFIC OFFICER AFTER OVERLOADED TRUCKS

The attention of stone truck owners is called to Section 32 of the Highway Traffic Act, which reads as follows:

"No motor vehicle or trailer having a permit issued under this Act, the fee for which is based upon the weight of the vehicle and load, shall at any time when upon a public highway, carry a load in excess of that for which the permit was issued as stated upon such permit, and for which the fee thereof was estimated."

The penalty for infraction of this act ranges from $10 to $200 and the cancellation of license for a period not exceeding six months.

Several offenders under this section have already been punished and the Highway Traffic Officer is determined to put a stop to this practice, the ill effects of which can be seen on our highway between Jarvis and Caledonia.

WINS VALUABLE PRIZE

The many friends of Mr. Wm. A. Kyle will be glad to learn of his good fortune in achieving a high standing among the prize winners of the recent Maclean's Magazine contest as conducted by Maclean's Magazine. Mr. Kyle received fourth prize in a recent contest and a cheque for a substantial amount, and congratulations are in order on his success in this unique series of contests, of which Maclean's Magazine announces a new one in each issue. This is the first time Maclean's has had the pleasure of sending a prize cheque to Jarvis and we hope it will not be the last opportunity they will have.

IN THE EARLY PIONEER DAYS OF CANADA

A Sketch of the Life of Major General Sir Isaac Brock
By Colm Irwin

Sentry duty is not pleasant at their best. On October 13th found these men drenched by the violent storm of wind and rain. Near 3 o'clock the rain ceased a little, but a mist remained over the river. As they walked south on the eastern rampart one noticed before he turned three brilliant lights in the direction of Queenston, a few seconds more he heard the report of three large guns, then the flashes grew into hundreds and the sentry was hurrying back to report when he met the General himself fully dressed. He had seen the light burning in the General's room all night — had he slept at all. The General jumped into his saddle, told the sentry to open the rampart gates. He held his horse in check as he gave an order to his body servant, then he started at full speed. He was met by a Dragon covered by mud, who said the Americans were landing at Queenston, that during the night men had scaled the cliff and hidden in the dense shrubs at Queenston Heights. (Trees and shrubs skirted the cliff along the river edge in those days), amounting to hundreds the mist so dense that the sentry did not observe them.

If ever General Brock's noble charger, Alfred, had made haste over the road it was now. More than one pioneer put their face to the window to see through the misty morning light, the General hurrying at full speed to Queenston. The news had been carried by this time to the inhabitants. They had heard the call to arms. As General Brock neared the lower end of the village of Queenston, which at that time consisted of a few stone buildings, it was daylight, he could see partially the scene of trouble. Stepping on Colonel McLeod just long enough to speak a few words — an order to Fort George for reinforcements — he hastened on. Mighty shells were bursting around Queenston Heights, several boat loads of troops floated the river from the United States, which were the target for the large guns, at the landing stage. Even as the General looked, the shell of a big gun burst near one of these, emptying its contents of human beings into the river.

The heavy fire from the other side prevented the full exposure of the boats passing across. In a short time there were nearly a thousand against a small British outpost, but they were desperately resisting, keeping the Americans from advancing. General Brock had rode northward toward Queenston as he passed troops of volunteers hurrying to the scene of action. He gave them a word of praise, hurrying straight to where the battle was raging under heavy fire of artillery and musketry. He placed himself at the head of a light company of volunteers. A volley from the heights, where a detachment of the enemy which had reached it from ambush along the cliff, interrupted his view. He and his volunteers passed from the vicinity of the battery to a position where the British were trying to drive the enemy back and the assailants trying to push forward. It was a confused struggle, both parties nearing the precipice, some American officers were appalled, were on the point of raising the white flag, but a captain tore it down rallying his party. By this time General Brock had gained an opening. All that he could do was to fight like one of his own officers. Seeing him pressing forward, conspicuous as he was by his dress, his height and bearing, an officer spoke to him of his exposure to the artillery. As might have been expected of one who had said: "How can I expect the men to follow where I am afraid to lead?" It was a hand to hand struggle. If a failure on his part to set the example of fearless self devotion, it might have been disastrous. To the fortune of the day he was in the lead and pointing up the hill saying: "Push on, brave York Volunteers." Just uttered, when a ball too well directed struck him in the right breast and laid low the hope and stay of Canada and as brave and heroic a leader as ever led for Britain. If his name has not been known to fame it has long been cherished by a grateful people amidst whom was sacrificed a life so noble and to them, as it seemed, at the time so indispensable. During an interval after the fall of General Brock and that of his Aid de Camp Colonel McDonald who was struck down two hours after while leading two companies of the York Volunteers up the hill, in obedience to the General's last words, he being mortally wounded, there was a lull for a little while the Americans held their position.

The meeting was brought to a close by singing the National Anthem. The hostess served lunch and a social half hour was spent. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Tyrrell for her hospitality.

NANTICOKE W. I.

The monthly meeting of the Nanticoke Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. W. H. Evans on Wednesday, July 13th, at 2.30 p.m. The meeting opened by singing the Opening Ode, followed by the Lord's Prayer, after which the minutes of the June meeting were read and adopted. A letter was read from the Federated Women's Institutes, asking for a donation to help pay for a doctor in New Ontario. It was decided to send $5 to them. It was decided that our August meeting be in the form of a picnic at Hickory Beach on Friday afternoon, August 12th, and that we invite Varence to join with us. Letters of appreciation for flowers sent them were read from Mrs. Geo. Volkes and Miss Ida Volkes, and Mrs. Thompson personally thanked them for flowers sent to her. We then all joined in singing "O Canada." Miss Kathleen Snowden and Miss Ethel Volkes gave us two splendid papers on "Confederation." Another community song, "The Maple Leaf Forever," was sung. The meeting closed by singing the National Anthem, after which lunch was served by our hostess. There were 12 present. A vote of thanks was extended Mrs. Evans for her kind hospitality.
