JARVIS AND WALPOLE CHURCHES VERY BREVIA

We are seeing the birth of a greater internationalism and brotherhood than he ever dreamed of. We are seeing with our own eyes the exclusive barriers of racialism and nationalism go down before the onslaught of a wave of internationalism more potent and more powerful than anything of its kind that the world has heretofore believed to be possible. Today there is no such thing for possible for a nation as a policy of splendid isolation. The nation that attempts to isolate itself from the world signs its own death warrant, it puts itself into the backwater of life, it essays an impossible task. Give itself about as it will with all the barriers possible, turn its back as resolutely as it may upon the rest of the world, it yet cannot live alone; it cannot escape contacts with its fellows, for modern science, modern commerce, modern exploration have demolished the last barriers, have captured the last fortresses of nationalism for internationalism. Today the words of St. Paul carry a deeper significance than ever before; they are as applicable to nations as to individuals — "No man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." "The world is webbed into one fabric, we cannot longer live apart." As Christian men and women, therefore, we hail with gladness every new discovery or invention that tends to break down the walls of our exclusiveness and which welds us into one great brotherhood. If we could, we would not, we dare not go back to the old days of isolation, of separateness; the new is infinitely better than the old. Gladly and gratefully we accept from the hands of God, as His gift to mankind everything that binds us closer and firmer to our fellowmen. But let me as I close, send this one note of warning. If in our new contacts with races and peoples there lie, as I am convinced there does, possibilities of organized fraternity, let us remember also that in those same contacts lie terrific possibilities of friction, strife and endless war. If with our new sense of internationalism there does not come a christianizing of the powers that make it possible, we shall not have advanced very far along the pathway of universal brotherhood. To christianize all our international relations and contacts then is the task of the church, perhaps its greatest task today. It is no easy task, it is no task that will only be achieved by some labor and work on the part of all Christian peoples and organizations. There is no short cut to success.

No easy hope or lies
Shall bring us to our goal,
But from sacrifice,
Of body, will and soul.

Our duty then as representatives of two great nations seeking each others welfare is to christianize our contacts between each other, to cement them with brotherly love, to rivet them tighter with the bonds of Christian friendship and fellowship, to make forever impossible the old systems of hatreds and suspicions, to put aside as far as possible all national and personal differences, to remember that today there is no such thing as a chosen people, that all nations and all peoples are the medium through which the Eternal Father of all men works out His gracious purpose for humanity.

Our task is to labor and work to bring into existence on this continent a society permeated by the spirit of justice, of sympathy, of goodwill, to march in the forefront of every movement that has for its objective the ultimate brotherhood of man, to so permeate it with the spirit of Jesus Christ as to make it impossible to use it in a hurtful way, to so guide and direct it that it will become a divine instrument in the hands of God for smiting evil and for rewarding good. Even in our ears there must ring the words of the angelic messengers who heralded the coming of the Christ: "Peace on earth, good will to men. Only as we do this can we tread in the footsteps of Him, who when He came established a new bond of union independent of race, of class or sex when He declared that "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother and sister and mother." Men and women, as representatives of two of the youngest and mightiest nations, we have come to-
