An Anglo-Japanese Entente

Nation and Athenaeum (London): The strong anti-Japanese sentiment which prevails in some of the Dominions, and the extravagant talk sometimes indulged in about Anglo-Amerlean unity of purpose in all things, have excited an apprehension of danger in a proud and sensitive, but extremely nervous people. They have more than once provoked an exceed ingly dangerous frame of mind in millions of peaceful Japanese, who saw in them a warning that the two most powerful nations in the world were ready, at a moment's notice to combine against them; that the quarreis of the one would be regarded as the quarrels of the other, for no other son than that an Anglo-Saxon race was at issue with an Asiatic one.
