Samoans who have been untouched by modern civilization are as scarce in the Pacific islands as uncivilized Indians in Canada, the Natonal Geographic Society reports. Now and then a veteran of threescore and ten is encountered in the forests of the interior. He carries an eight-foot bow a supply of barbed arrows and a spear, all of which give him a vicious appearance; but the first thing he is likely to do when you meet him is to invite you into his hut, a large singleroomed oval structure of thatched leaves, branches and sugarcane stalks.

It Didn't Pay

There was once a goat herd that contained two of the most stubborn goats that there ever were. One day all the goats were playing and frisking about on the mountain side when these two goats met on a narrow tree which had fallen across a deep chasm. The tree was so narrow that they could not possibly pass each other. Each was too stubborn to turn back.

"I will not move for you," said the first goat. "Get out of the way if you do not want to be dashed to pieces."

"Not at all," said the second. "It is your place to back up. If you do not back up I shall push you off."

Each stubbornly pushed ahead until they met horn to horn right in the middle of the log. Here each angrily pushed against the other and they were both knocked off and fell to their death in the deep chasm below. An old goat who had looked on at this needless disaster sighed: It is better to yield than to come to dis-
