

Feat of Alcock and Brown Repeated Again By French Flyers

Stowaway Adding An Additional Weight Not Counted On In Estimates of Trip Nearly Lost Lives of All

MID-ATLANTIC THRILL

Paris, June 15.—Three gallant Frenchmen swooped down out of the clouds this evening to the acclaim that had awaited them for two days for being the first to blaze the name of France on the dangerous air route over the Atlantic.

Jean Assolant, Rene Le Fevre and Armand Lott, Jr., had been taken to the heart of France to-night for their flight without stop from Old Orchard, Maine, to Comillas, Spain, only a few miles short of their goal of French territory. They supplied that missing link in two hops to-day, and came down on Le Bourget field at 3:47 p.m., to be hugged, kissed and cheered by their relatives and a large crowd that awaited them.

Assolant gave this audience a thrill by his dramatic touch in streaking over the field at a speed of 150 miles an hour and landing while the Yellow Bird was still going more than 50 miles an hour.

"The last quarter hour was the worst," he said as he jumped from the cockpit and his mother smothered him with kisses. Lott summed up the experience of all of them when he said: "The transatlantic flying problem has not yet been solved."

Motor Stopped in Mid-Ocean

How close to-night's heroes came to finding a watery grave like the many others he had preceded them was told when Lott received newspapermen in the dining room of his father's hotel. "Our motor stopped in mid-ocean and really we were scared," he said.

Assolant interrupted him with: "Speak for yourself, Armand, say you were scared. I did not have time to be scared."

It developed that the trouble was due to a leaking valve which the fliers thought had been fixed up before they took-off from Old Orchard Thursday.

Aviation Minister Laurent Eynac

and representatives from the foreign office were waiting at the field, but the first words of Assolant, first man out of the plane, were: "Where is mother?" Mother was right there.

"I would like to get a glass of white wine," Assolant said immediately after his mother let him escape from her embrace. The aviator was carried to the headquarters of the 34th Regiment, where the aviation minister and Commandant Nevoise officially received the aviators.

Lott admitted that the weight of the stowaway undoubtedly prevented the Yellow Bird from reaching France. "We had dispensed with every ounce of extra weight, not even taking bananas or gum boots, and Schreiber endangered our lives by his act. It is safely over now. I bear him no hard feelings, but when I was startled 20 minutes from Old Orchard by his hand on my shoulder I wanted to wring Schreiber's neck."

Made Schreiber Sign Contract

"I made Schreiber sign a rude contract aboard the plane, providing for a 50-50 split of all newspaper earnings with Assolant and Le Fevre. I have signed him up with the same syndicate as myself, so the stories won't repeat and spoil each other's value. I have signed Schreiber for $20,000 for an exclusive story for a syndicate."

Two bananas each and one thin sandwich were all the fliers ate during the trip. "Somehow or other it seems one doesn't get very hungry on these transatlantic flights," Assolant said.

Lott to-night said: "We will try to make it the other way next time, Paris to New York and without stops anywhere."

Lott added: "Perhaps officialdom will permit us to try it now that we have proven we can do it." Whether the return flight would be attempted this summer was left unsaid.

The Duke of York In a Car Crash

His First Thought For Hurt Motorcyclist

Staines—The Duke of York, while recently motoring in London road, Staines, came in collision with a motorcycle combination near Billett Bridge.

The bridge crosses the canal on the outskirts of the town. The Duke's motor-car was travelling towards London at the time.

"A motor-coach was coming from the opposite direction," said Mr. G. F. Rollings, proprietor of a hotel a few yards from the scene of the accident.

"At the same moment, a motorcycle combination appeared from behind the coach, and became sandwiched between it and the Duke's car.

"The motorcycle crashed into the side of the Duke's car, which was badly damaged, and the Duke and his companion received a shaking.

"The Duke jumped out and said to the motorcyclist 'Are you hurt?' The cyclist looked very shaken, and was holding his right arm as though it was injured.

"He was most plucky, however, and said 'No, sir, thank you.' Police were called, and they took details of the accident, while the Duke sat inside the car.

"It was fortunate that the sidecar of the motorcycle combination was empty, or there might have been a much more serious smash.

"The Duke again asked the motorcyclist if he felt all right before his motor car drove off again to London. A little crowd of people gathered, and specially recognized the Duke, who was cheered as he drove away."

West Indian Trade

Saint John Telegraph-Journal (Ind.): Canada has the best market for the fruits and vegetables and other products of the West Indies. We must buy such products, and it is obvious that it is in the interest of the Empire to draw into closer trade relations with the British Colonies to the south rather than seek in foreign markets what we may better purchase from them.

Empire Building

Victoria Colonist (Cons.): It should be the ultimate aim of the British Empire to make itself as self-supporting as possible. It should be possible to make it the aim of all its constituent parts, where they cannot buy goods manufactured at home, to buy those made in some other part of the Empire. That is the road to self-support. In the aggregate Empire-buyers become Empire builders.

Swedish Fliers Forced Down On Iceland Coast

Engine Balks Near End of Second Leg of Flight—1450 Miles Covered

Stockholm.—The airplane Sverige, bearing Cap. Albin Ahrenberg and two companions upon their projected Stockholm-to-New York flight, has been forced down at Skaptaros, in southwest Iceland.

The fliers made a safe landing, after engine trouble developed when they were within about 150 miles of Reykjavik, Iceland, their destination, upon the second leg of the flight. Skaptaros is approximately 1450 miles from Stockholm.

Radio Tells of Flight

The fliers left Stockholm at 5 a. m. June 9, carrying 1200 letters and 20 postal packages for New York. The destination on their first "hop" was Bergen, Norway.

They were accompanied on the initial leg of the trip by the financial backer of the flight, Tage Cervin, and Sven Jerring, announcer of the Stockholm Broadcasting Corporation who radioed a continuous account of the flight from the airplane.

Flying at a height of more than 9000 feet, the Sverige made the first aerial crossing of Norway's snow-capped Langejaelø Mountains. The plane arrived at Bergen at noon.

After a luncheon given by Bergen military flying officials Captain Ahrenberg and Lieutenant Floden and Radio Operator Ljunglund, took off on the second part of the journey.

Non-Freezing Fuel

The Sverige was made especially for the transatlantic flight by the Junkers factory, and is equipped with a Junkers L-5 six-cylinder water-cooled motor with an extra high compression ratio. Its tanks hold sufficient fuel for 17 and one half hours flying.

A mixture of benzol and toluol which will withstand a temperature of 30 degrees below zero, Centigrade, without freezing, was to be used as far as Greenland, where arrangements have been made to refuel with benzol.

The purpose of the flight, according to Captain Ahrenberg, is to demonstrate the possibility of carrying passengers across the Atlantic by air, using the Greenland-Labrador route, which gives the shortest over water distances.

The total time for the Stockholm-New York flight was originally computed upon a 47-hour schedule, including stops of not more than two hours each at the refueling points.

Foreign Immigration

Manitoba Free Press (Lib.) Our immigration policy towards the non-preferred countries ought to be one of non-solicitation, but not one of arbitrary exclusion under the operation of a quota. We already have a large settlement of people from these lands in this country; and we can rely upon these people to bring in a considerable volume of immigrants of a good type every year. This we should regard as sufficient.
