The Underpaid Rural Mail Carriers

The people of Canada, without regard to party affiliations, will have a good deal of sympathy with the case of rural mail carriers as vented in the House of Commons at Ottawa the other day. For a number of years past the grievances of these men have been presented in statements to the newspapers and in petitions to the Government, yet so far, no appreciable relief has been granted. The cause of the unsatisfactory condition of affairs appears to be in the system of awarding contracts for the delivery of rural mail by tender, instead of establishing the remuneration upon a permanent basis, with definite rates of pay based upon mileage and the physical condition of the territory which must be traversed by the mail carrier.

In Canada there is said to be more than 40,000 rural mail carriers whose remuneration is utterly inadequate. In the United States the established rate is $75 per mile, while in Canada under the system of contract by tender, only $40 per mile is paid. According to figures presented in the House the average remuneration of Canadian rural mail carriers, is not more than $800 a year, out of which it is necessary for them to maintain their equipment of horses and motor cars. The average length of rural mail routes is 20 miles, and the cost of maintenance ranges from $220 to $440 a year, leaving a margin for subsistence which is scarcely compatible with the standards of living in Canada.

It is well that this whole question has been ventilated in Parliament. For the most part, when mail carriers are established upon a permanent basis under a scale of wages determined by the Civil Service Commission. It is time that the whole question was taken into consideration and the grievances that are alleged to exist remedied. These rural mail carriers occupy position of trust and responsibility, their services are performed under exacting physical conditions, in all kinds of weather, and upon all kinds of roads, and they should be suitably remunerated. It is encouraging to note that the Postmaster-General has expressed the opinion that a better system can be found, and that it is his intention to see what can be done to improve their condition.

He was discovered by his son, Ross Markham, who went to get his motor cycle but discovered the smell of gas as he opened the doors and there beheld the prostrate figure of his father. The motor was still running and from evidence it was proven that the father had been trying to fix the oil filter in his car when he was overcome by the deadly fumes of the gas.
