CREAMERY MONOXIDE

Muriel remarked the other day she didn't think she would be here by the time another year was up. His intentions must be favorable.

Newt hopped off in his Puddle Jumper for a trip to the U. S. A. on Friday a. m., last. He took Loota along to fix the flat tires.

George reported a very good time trip to Erie, on the Steamer, Keystone, on Sunday last.

Stony is thinking seriously of becoming a mechanic, after spending several hours on Courtney's machine, he thinks he is quite an expert.

The absence of Stevie last Monday made Ad Libb churn for the day.

Daily calls the new addition of the Office Staff, Billy as he says he can't possibly say Elizabeth.

George says he wishes he had Newt's job all the time, as he is actually getting fat on it.

Courtney says any one desiring taxi service, will get real service if they give him a ring.

Uncle Ralph started to wear his tortoise shells again on Tuesday, weighing butter must be hard on his eyes.

MEASLES

Measles is one of the most common and dangerous disease of childhood.
It is difficult to understand why so many parents look upon measles as a trivial disease, as one which is not to be compared with diphtheria or scarlet fever. It is thought so little of that some parents, regarding it as something inevitable that must occur sooner or later, do not hesitate to expose their child so that he may have the disease and get it over with.

Measles never die out altogether; there are always a few cases, and usually, every two years, there is a real epidemic. Measles causes more deaths than scarlet fever, and in epidemic years, its death rate is often greater than that of diphtheria.

One reason which may account for the feeling that measles is not particularly serious is that the deaths of a large number of children after an attack of measles are shown to have been directly caused by broncho-pneumonia.

Parents think their child was a victim of pneumonia. This is true of course, but the pneumonia would not have occurred had it not been for the measles. The real cause of the child's death is measles, and this should be clearly understood.

In the years which see a measles ery if it occurs.

epidemic, there is also noted a considerable increase in the number of deaths of children under five years of age from pneumonia.

These facts should be sufficient to persuade parents that measles is a serious disease, and that they should take every precaution to protect their children from its serious and frequent fatal results.

Measles is infectious from the time the first symptom shows itself. It starts with what is apparently a cold in the head, and the rash does not appear for some days. During the days before the appearance of the rash the disease is spread by the secretions from the mouth and nose. This is one of the reasons for keeping children who suffer from colds away from other children. Colds are bad enough in themselves, but what appears to be a cold may often be a still more serious condition.

The serious results of measles would be prevented in many cases if proper care were given. Bed is the place for a child who is developing measles, and there he may stay until he has recovered, no matter how mild the attack may appear to be.

Fortunately we have learned something about preventing measles in those exposed to it. Blood serum from a convalescent measles case can be used by the physician to prevent an attack or to lessen its sev-
