What Ambition Did for Joe

Joe had a job in a factory. Though it was hard, he worked cheerfully early and late, because he wanted to be a foreman with larger pay in order that he might give his wife and children a better home. Then he began to feel extra tired, and his work was weary all day long and his chest pained him. One day he faintered at his job. The doctor said he had only one chance of recovery from his trouble—consumption—and that was to be treated at the Muskoka Hospital for Consumptives. So it was Joe that it has taken almost two years to build him up to anything like normal, but he hopes to be able to return home soon and take up once more the duty of supporting his family.

For work such as this, your subscription is asked. Will you please send as much as you can to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College Street, Toronto.

Welcome Home.

Canada this week welcomes home to her shores the native son, whom four months ago, she acclaimed her first citizen—R. B. Bennett.

Mr. Bennett has attended his representative of Canada. That he has done so to his own increased prestige and to the honor of the Dominion is accepted at once.

Before the Conference began the forecast was made that Mr. Bennett would be the dominant personality in its councils. He has been. He carried to it nearly thirty-five years experience in the public life of his country, thirty-five years which have carried him from a modest village council in New Brunswick to the highest office in the gift of his fellow men. He carried to it the fruits of a brilliant career recognized by men of law when they placed him at the head of the Canadian Bar Association. He carried to it a record of achievement in the business world, a record carved out unselfishly as he made employment for thousands of his fellow Canadians—not through exploitation, but through the development of his own country.

Law and politics frequently go together. So do politics and business but in all the history of Canada no one man has achieved so high a standing in all three fields of service and endeavor.

not only of Mr. Bennett but of the cabinet colleagues who accompanied him to London as representatives of this dominion.

Diphtheria Should Go!

For some years we have known how to prevent diphtheria. Considering the fear which parents have of that disease, it might have been expected that they would have made every effort to secure protection for their children.

No such effort has been made by the parents. Diphtheria is a rare disease in only a comparatively small number of communities, where thanks to the persistent efforts of the health authorities, a large percentage of the parents have had their children immunized against diphtheria.

In Canada, many thousands of children have received the injections of diphtheria toxoid, a harmless substance, which, we may say, possesses a magic power. It is harmless and it is able, when injected in the body, to cause the body to produce protective forces against diphtheria.

When these protective forces have been produced, the individual is immunized against diphtheria. We speak of the injecting of diphtheria toxoid into the body as diphtheria immunization.

The process is a simple one, and young children are seldom, if ever, ill following the injection. This is one reason for doing the immunizations in early life, but it is not the chief one. Early action is important because diphtheria is a disease which occurs in its greatest severity among little children between the sixth month and the fifth year of life.

life.

We can say with assurance that diphtheria should go because we know how to make it disappear. It has been proved over and over again that it can be driven out by the use of diphtheria toxoid. There is no reason why in the year 1929, over nine hundred lives should have been sacrificed to this one disease in our country. There is no reason why ten times that number should have suffered from an attack of diphtheria which permanently injures many of those who recover from an attack. Diphtheria continues its deadly work in our midst, killing and maiming our children, because, individually, we fail to take the necessary action to protect our little ones from the attacks of this disease.

We may admire and applaud the results of medical research. We may say how wonderful it is that diphtheria has been added to the list of preventable diseases. What we do or say, however, will not save one life; it is what we do that counts.

Diphtheria toxoid, if left in a bottle, will not protect the child; it must be injected into his body and thus be given the opportunity to produce protective forces.

Diphtheria should go. Will you, by having your own children immunized do your part in sending it into the oblivion where it belongs?
