she cried out pleasantly. "No check his head, and easily inserted the needle of the hypodermic in his arm."

"Not yet," she said. "I am only impatient. Shall we get on with the story? Monsieur Henri de Laverge says he met a gentleman by the name of John Bruce out in your father's car a little while ago for the purpose of obtaining a loan in order that the said John Bruce might turn to the gambling joint and then to play. But Mr. Bruce did not return, and the deal, for some reason being anxious, telephones here to make inquiries. Of course, there was a savage laugh in his voice. 'It is only a suspicion but could this gentleman on the floor here by any chance be Mr. John Bruce?'"

"Yes," she said faintly. "He is John Bruce."

"Thanks!" said Doctor Crang sarcastically. He very carefully repaid his hypodermic in his pocket. Now another little matter. I happen to know that your father is spending the evening uptown, so I wonder who was in the car with Mr. John Bruce."

"She stared at him with flashing eyes."

"I was!" she answered passionately. "I don't know what you are driving at! I never did it before, but father was away and Monsieur de Laverge was terribly insistent. He said it was for a very special guest. I didn't, of course, tell Monsieur de Laverge that father couldn't go. I only said that I was afraid it would not be convenient to make any loan tonight. But he wouldn't listen to a refusal, and so I went—but Monsieur de Laverge had no idea that it was any one but father in the car."

Doctor Crang's lips parted wickedly. "Naturally!" he snarled. "I quite understand that you took good care of that! Who drove you?"

"Hawkins."

"Drunk as usual, I suppose! Brain too fuddled to ask questions!"

"That's not true!" she cried out sharply. "Hawkins hasn't touched a drop for a year."

"All right!" snapped Doctor Crang. "Have it that way then! Being in his dotage he makes a good blind, even so. And so you went for a little ride with Mr. John Bruce tonight?"

Claire Veniza was wringing her hands as she glanced in an agony of apprehension at the wounded man on "Yes," she said; "but—but won't you—"

"And where did you first meet Mr. John Bruce, and how long ago?" he jerked out.

Claire Veniza's great brown eyes widened.

"Why, I never saw him in my life until tonight!" she exclaimed. "And he wasn't in the car ten minutes. Hawkins drove back to the corner just as he always does with father, and Mr. Bruce got out. Then Hawkins drove me home and went uptown to get father. I—I wish they were here now!"

Doctor Crang was gritting his teeth together. A slight unnatural color was tinging his cheeks. He moved a little closer to the girl.

"I'm glad to hear you never saw Mr. Bruce before," he said cunningly. "You must have travelled 'fast' then—metaphorically speaking. Love at first sight, eh? A cooing exchange of confidences—or was it all on one side? You told him who you were, and where you lived, and—"

"I did nothing of the kind!" Claire Veniza interrupted angrily. "I did not tell him anything!"

CREAMERY MONOXIDE

Thorne and a couple of members of his family made a shopping tour in Hamilton on Saturday night and with his kind generosity he brought the boys in the plant a sack of humbugs.

Stewie was real sore at Stoney and Johnson Monday morning because they didn't get Selkirk cream weighed in early enough for him to wash his second churning. Stewie says he can wash his churnings much better with cream than with water.

The Crate started the separator the other day without putting the pan on, when told about it the Crate said he was simply trying out an experiment.

When the boys made a raid on Thorne's humbugs the other day, he said it reminded him of the battle of Vimy Ridge, he never saw such a charge. Stewie of course was the leader.

Anson Edwards says the beautiful highways in his locality make drawing milk a pleasure.
