Jones had started the day very badly. Getting out of bed that morning, he had stubbed his best corn on the bedpost.

Arriving down to breakfast he found that his post consisted of an incometax form and a number of tradesmen's bills.

During the meal he grumbled at the weakness of the porridge and the age of the eggs, and complained that the toast was like a cinder.

Mrs. Jones, however, smiled serene ly and remained silent. At last Jones was ready to depart for the office. Snatching up his umbrella, he dashed for the door without giving his wife the usual morning kiss.

Barely had he left the front garden than his wife opened the door and called to him.

"Well, what is it?" he snapped irritably from outside the gate. "You've forgotten something, dear," she coolly replied. "Have I?" he asked, mystified. What is it?"

"Darling," answered Mrs. Jones, putting on one of her best smiles, "you forgot to slam the door!"

What Is Highbrow? Too Much Education?

"A highbrow is one who has been educated above his intelligence." was the answer given by Ivor Brown, dramatic critic, to a question by Sir Ernest Wild, K.C., the Recorder, during a mock trial held recently at the London

School of Economics. The "trial" was of James Agate, dramatic critic of the British Broadcasting Company, who was charged with "falsely pretending to be a highbrow." He was found "not guilty."
