Historic Mill Gives Way to Modern Highway Bridge Over Railway at Waterford

Progress must be served and the old gives way to the new. Many, particularly the older people of the district, were touched with a feeling of sadness at the passing of the old Duncombe grist mill on the Nanticoke River at Waterford, one of the old historic landmarks of Norfolk County. The mill has just been razed to make way for the new highway bridge which will straighten out King's highway No. 24 at Waterford, spanning the Nanticoke and the Michigan Central railway line beside it, and incidentally eliminating one of the most feared level crossings in this part of Ontario. The old mill with its walls of stone, two feet thick, massive as a fortress, stood as a reminder to passing generations of the early pioneer days in Norfolk County. For 76 years it had stood at the centre of the community life of Waterford, grinding the grain and serving the residents of the town and the surrounding farms. Its associations through the years and the associations of its site give it an important place in the history of the Waterford district. After more than three-quarters of a century of service the old Duncombe mill has gone before the wrecker's hammer and modern explosives, its last owner, T. D. Duncombe of Waterford, great grandson of one of the Duncombe brothers who erected it in 1854. The Duncombe mill was not the first Waterford mill, but it was built on the site of the first mill which was owned by the earliest settler of the district, Job Slaght, who employed a man named Avery to build it. This mill was destroyed during the war of 1812 when United States forces under General McArthur invaded the territory and fired the buildings of the settlement. Local records preserve some thrilling incidents of these stirring days, and in connection with taking of the place by McArthur's men it is related "that they were about to hang three of the men for extinguishing a fire in the church yard at the south end of the village when the Masonic sign was given and their lives spared." The hanging, according to local tradition, was to have taken place on the hill back of the settlement about the site of the present Baptist church, where a large tree, with the rope thrown over a convenient limb, was to serve as gallows. Separated from the Mill site on the south side by the railway, formerly the Canada Southern railway, is the home of Dr. E. J. Teeter, which is to be moved back from main street

HEALTH SERVICE Of The Canadian Medical Association

CANCER

There are diseases, like diphtheria and smallpox, about which we are so well informed that we can deal with them effectively. There are others regarding which our knowledge is less, but which is still sufficient to enable us to do a great deal in the way of prevention or cure, as in the case of tuberculosis. Unfortunately, there are, in addition, diseases such as cancer, about which we know comparatively little, but yet the little we do know is so important that we would be able to lessen the ravages of this disease, if we made full use of even the limited knowledge we have. The cause of cancer is unknown. The disease cannot be cured after it has passed the early stages. The important thing for us to understand is that, if properly treated in its early stages, before it has had chance to spread from its original location, cancer can be cured. A tumour is any lump or new growth in the body. There are some tumours which are harmless or benign. These benign tumours may grow to an enormous size, but they do not spread and destroy life. The other class is that of malignant tumours. A cancer is a malignant tumour. Malignant tumours grow and spread and they eventually destroy life. The specific cause which results in the formation of cancer is unknown. The disease is not inherited. Cancer is not contagious. We do know that there are some conditions which act as contributing factors in the formation of cancer. These should be known to all so that they may be avoided, in order to escape the disease. Chronic irritation seems to play a definite part in cancer. Repeated irritation of the lip, mouth or tongue by a hot or rough pipe-stem may be followed by cancer. The disease is found to occur at the cervix or neck of the uterus when this part is chronically irritated as the result of a tear which was not properly repaired at the time of childbirth. Cancer of the mouth follows the chronic irritation caused by broken teeth or by ill-fitting dental plates. Such chronic irritation is a pre-disposing factor, although cancer does not always follow such irritation. The use of wisdom to play a part in the prevention or correct all such causes of chronic irritation. An growth or swelling, any unusual discharge from the body, any sore which does not readily heal, any change in the size or appearance of warts or moles, any induration should be promptly looked into. It is by prompt attention to such conditions that it may be possible to have an early cancer cured. Delay in securing treatment is always dangerous, and it may mean that life itself may be lost through the disease. Questions concerning health addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.
