APPRECIATION

Mr. G. Dosser wishes to express his appreciation to the Fire Brigade and to the many neighbors and friends who so generously helped at the fire which destroyed his barns, etc., on Tuesday, August 19th.

REMINISCENCE OF APPRECIATION

I don't care how you live, you will have grief and joy,
You was once mother's pet and your fathers joy,
They both may now be gone, just think of what they said,
But honour them if still alive, don't wait till they are dead.

When you were in your teens and done some naughty pranks,
We know you were too old to take your father's spansks,
And your mother then would say, by other boys you were led,
For boys are boys you know, even after they retire to bed.

When you leave all your teens behind and think you are a man,
Don't think your Dad's no good and put him on the pan;
But listen to his advice and remember what he said,
You should appreciate him while alive, not after he is dead.

Now that I am growing old and my hair is turning fast,
It is now that I do realize, that the best of life is past,
But if I have done things wrong—the perfect life not led,
'Tis now you say had things of me, and good when I am dead.

There is no man on earth but what has done some wrong,
But if he has made good—then sing his praise in song;
Try and make his heart light and gay and not heavy like lead,
Just say the good words now not after he is dead.

When a man reaches seventy, his three score years and ten,
'Tis then that he must live on borrowed time from other men,
And when he is old and weak, unconscious on his dying bed,
It is then too late to see him for he is then half dead.

The time is going fast and I am seventy four,
I really cannot expect to live only a few years more;
So come and see me now, for I am now well fed,
If you can't see me when alive then don't see me when dead.

Thos. Butcher.

THE SKIN

Beauty may be only skin-deep, but a healthy skin is the reflection of the health of the whole body. The skin mirrors the manner of living of the individual.

A healthy skin generally means that a healthy mode of life is followed and that the body is in a state of health. A flabby skin usually indicates lack of exercise, and suggests that the muscles of the body are in poor shape.

Paleness, blotches, pimples and other such conditions very frequently mean that the habits of life are faulty. It may be that the diet is not balanced or that the need for rest is overlooked or that sufficient fresh air is not being secured.

Unfortunately, all skin abnormalities are not due to an unhygienic life and cannot be corrected by attention to the habits of living. The majority, however, are due to such causes, and they can be corrected by giving attention to diet, rest, fresh air and the other essential health needs of the body.

The skin is nature's barrier to infection. The broken skin invites the entrance of germs which cause infection. It is therefore desirable to care for the skin, to protect it and to keep it intact. Everyone should have his own wash-cloth and towel. Common towels are responsible for the spread of skin infections.

The skin is also the means by which the constant temperature of the body is maintained. Through perspiration, the skin increases evaporation and the dissipation of heat. It is desirable to keep the skin clean, in order to enable it to do its best work.

The number of baths indicated for any individual depends upon his mode of life and the season of the year. The person who perspires freely as a result of his work, or on account of the heat, should take a warm bath daily. Two warm baths a week are advisable for everyone.

In addition to keeping the skin, baths have other good effects. A cool bath each morning is, to many people, stimulating and desirable. There are others who do not react well to a cool or cold bath, and who are chilled by it. Such individuals should avoid cool baths as they are harmful for them.

As we have said, in most cases a healthy skin is secured by a healthy mode of living and cleanliness. Skin conditions which do not respond to such care require medical attention. A healthy skin mirrors good health and is a personal asset that cannot be secured except through proper living.

Questions concerning health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College St., Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.
