APRIL ESCAPADE

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

SYNOPSIS
Mary Kate O'Hara, in order that her brother, Martin, might have an opportunity to go to Germany to study medicine, agrees to marry a man named Christopher, who is a doctor. Mary Kate is a young woman of a very different complexion and a different character than the girl who is going to be married. She is a girl of a very different complexion and a different character than the girl who is going to be married. She is a girl of a very different complexion and a different character than the girl who is going to be married.

CHAPTER XXXVI
Mary Kate had stopped breathing. All was lost now. She raised her head and looked defiantly, steadily at her brother. Martin's face was ghastly.
"You said there were others in the house, Sir," he asked, almost in a whisper. "The eyes of sister and brother met, and they might have been alone in the world, but Mary Kate answered, hardly audibly:
"There weren't," Mrs. Kate answered, hardly audibly:
"And he did call you Mrs. Steynes, didn't he?"
"Yes, Martin."
"Martin's tone was suddenly gentle, all brotherly:
"How much money did you take from him, dear?"
"None," she he spoke. But the little fender word, disarmed her, and she faltered out an indistinct monosyllable, and was silent, hanging her head.
"Tell me the truth, won't you, Molly? You know no one in the world loves you as much as I do," Martin pleaded.
Her armor was pierced. Through eyes suddenly drenched again she tried to smile at him.
"Honestly, Sir, I didn't do anything wrong! Honestly, Molly, I didn't do anything wrong! I didn't do anything wrong! I didn't do anything wrong! I didn't do anything wrong!"

CHAPTER XXXVII
"I'll tell the world it was not!" Chris agreed scornfully, as Martin paused.
"Now you say, and she says, but it was all a practical joke, and I believe you," Martin resumed, nodding a little, but in no other way taking any notice of Chris's manner. "But you must see that you have done her a terrible injustice. She has been engaged to Mr. Keating here—"
"My dear Mr. O'Hara," Chris said, "all the men of the world, you are taking all this far too seriously. Of course we took a chance, your sister and I. But just because appearances were against us doesn't mean that you have to treat the girl as if she's strayed all the laws of God and man."
"No, honestly, Martin, he's right," Cass said.
"He's right," Martin repeated, nodding.
"He came to Martin's side and held out his hand to Mary Kate, and she got to her feet, and went over to take the hand he had vacated. Cass sat on the arm of it, with his arm about her. "I told you that," he said, "it was all a mistake."
"Mary Kate leaned her head against his arm, and closed her eyes. He was being so generous, so kind. And it mattered so little!
"When she says that everything was straight and aboveboard, why that means everything was straight and aboveboard!" Cass said cheerily.
Martin looked from one man to the other gloomily.
"He's not afraid of what people think of her reputation, Cass," Martin presently said, with a glance at Chris. "It doesn't cost him anything to bash it up, buy me off, pay my hospital bills—that's nothing to him."

In a Public Park
Once on a time (the fates tell me so)
The trees grew weary of green life.
Saying, "Why should we be the radiance
Of the earth's face?"
Then, as the sun shone brightly,
The trees grew weary of green life.
Saying, "Why should we be the radiance
Of the earth's face?"

CHAPTER XXXVIII
Again for a moment nobody spoke, in the orderly kitchen, with its wicker, shabby table, and chairs, and the green of the plants in the window boxes.
"I saw the trees crowned so, and content
To face the trifles which we know no shame."

DRAPERIES MADE NEW
"When we resumed housekeeping a month ago I found my carpets had become crumpled from packing. I hung them out on the line, hoping to remove the creases. They forgot them. So I had to ask Mr. Christopher Steynes to help me. He promised I'd get into a wash dress and go back and set with my own hands. I have never seen easier dyes to use than Diamond Dyes. They give the most beautiful colors—bright and true. I have never seen easier dyes to use than Diamond Dyes. They give the most beautiful colors—bright and true. Shakespeare Day
April 23rd will be observed in many places as Shakespeare Day. It is appropriate for schools and clubs to celebrate the one personality who has broken down all international barriers in literature to inspire us, and because we need to look back to the grand old days to keep our standards high. It is a little above us, but his plays may be enacted by boys and girls in their towns, and bring down to earth the grand theatre. Try it out in your neighborhood this year.

Shrubbery
Smokes the home grounds of a man who is very fond of shrubbery. It is just the opposite of a dog and a cat. It is just the opposite of a dog and a cat. It is just the opposite of a dog and a cat.

Measuring Shortening
Some housewives find it difficult to measure a half cup of shortening. An easy way is to fill a cup half full of water. Add shortening to this until the cup is full. Pour the water and you have the correct measure of shortening.

Her Protection
The plover dove his hat from the sky, and to his consternation he saw a lady who was sitting on the grass in the middle of the highway. "Don't you know it's very dangerous to sit there, madam?" he said, coming up to her, and she replied: "The old lady is sitting on a newspaper."

Prince and Fiancee

This interesting photograph shows Prince Lennart of Sweden and his fiancée, Miss Karin Nilstrand, the announcement of his engagement to whom at Stockholm caused a sensation in Swedish royal circles.
