THE TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

never been actually introduced to you myself. The friends whom I ask to meet my father are not usually acquainted so suddenly!"

"Don't quibble!" Peter said sharply. "The statement you understand will be public property in a few hours anyway. If I can get it from your father personally, and get it first, I'll have a whole of a good story. If I don't—well, I'm sure that's all. And it's more likely to mail it than to take it himself. I'm sure you'll be glad to help me." "No," said Barbara. "He won't mail it. Father never wastes time. I think for the occasion of a crisis, you almost might be one of my friends."

At that moment the front door opened, framing Dr. Cavanaugh's bulky figure for a moment before he descended the steps with his usual air of deliberation covering the speed that comes of so acute motion.

"Can you wait just a minute, father," Barbara called out. "I want you to meet Mr. Piper. He's a friend of mine who works on a newspaper."

Dr. Cavanaugh held out his hand with his grave but friendly smile.

"My dealings with the newspaper have been at second hand," he said. "But this younger generation has a way of adding to our education."

I hoped I might meet you if I came around," Peter said with a disarming grin. In fact, his suggestion was to come to his office outside Lawrence's doorstop at this moment, but I cooled them outside your apartment. I'm a psychologist, he was introduced by the suspicion that his subconscious was arranging a possible opportunity for him to see Barbara again—and that he was pinning his faith on her because he desperately wanted that faith.

But by the time he had waited half an hour, a chill grayness had seeped upwards from his toes and spread until it absorbed even the pale sunny line of the sky. He was so pale, a flash without excuse. She was not coming. Dr. Cavanaugh had doubtless sent his report by mail. Even if it had been received at the police department on the morning delivery, and Jews of the Record was something to be proud of. He was so deep in despondency that he did not even see the shiny little sports coat until the corner of his eye caught a flash of white and rose as Barbara slammed the door of the car behind her. With that, he was across the street. "Thank God!" he said loudly and fervently.

"Oh, yes!" The corners of Barbara's lips turned upward. "It's that the way newspaper men say 'Good morning'?"

"You bet it is!" Peter agreed. "Look here," he hurried on, glancing uneasily at the closed front door of the Cavanaugh house. "The other day I asked you to do something for me, and you wouldn't. Now I'm going to ask you to do something else."

"Meanwhile, you've done something for me," Barbara said gravely. "I don't think you're a very good sport, but I'm sure you didn't write anything about me—that I'm going to thank you."

Peter flushed. It was a rare opportunity that the rest of the Herald room missed, for not one of them had ever seen Peter blush.

"I don't know what I'd have done," he said with difficult honesty, "if a big story hadn't broken and let me out."

"I'm glad you said that," Barbara said simply. "I like people who tell the truth—when it isn't necessary. I don't think you're a very good sport, but I'm sure you didn't write anything about me—that I'm going to thank you."

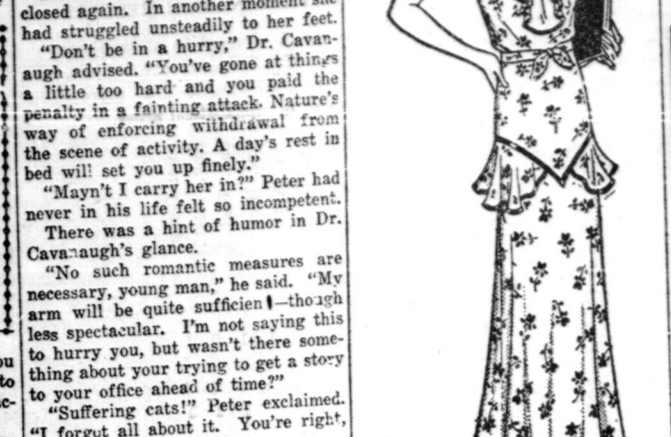

CHAPTER XVII.

Dr. Cavanaugh, despite his age and his position on the steps, several feet farther away from the car, was waiting for support. Her eyes were closed. Her lips were only a faint compressed line against the pallor of where her fingers clung to the door. Her face was pale and her eyes were closed. Schneider Race Trials Started

R. A. F. Pilots Determined to Win Famous Cup Outright
Calshot, Hampshire, England—Boasting in swift seaplanes over Southampton water and the Solent, picked speed pilots of the Royal Air Force are preparing to battle hard for the Schneider trophy they have already won twice in succession.

The race trials will be largely an affair of Governments. In this respect it is unique in the world of sports, if indeed it can be classed in the world of sports and its highly important strategic aspects put in the background.

Engines Concealed
The second of two new British seaplanes reached Calshot recently. The engines of both planes are concealed for the most part, with few gadgets visible to the lay observer they convey little, except a sharp impression of great power in reserve.

It is doubtful whether the great increase in speed marking the successive races so far will be maintained to increase weight to other directions. The new conditions are roughly estimated to amount to an extra half of the race.
