The Parent and The School.

The growing child spends a number of years in school in order that he may be prepared for adult life. This preparation for life includes the child's body as well as his mind. It is neither necessary nor desirable that the health of the school child should be neglected or sacrificed. The end to achieve is a sound mind in a sound body.

The modern school provides a healthy environment for the child during the many hours he spends there. Attention is given to fresh air, sunshine, cleanliness, provision for play and other facilities which make for a healthy development of the child's body.

In order that the child may get the best out of his school years, it is necessary that the parent and the school co-operate. Neither can take on the responsibility of the other. The parent is responsible for seeing that the child is properly fed, that he is clean when he leaves for school that he goes to bed at the proper hour and sleeps with his window open. The school is responsible for protecting the child from communicable diseases and for providing him with healthy surroundings and an opportunity to develop his body.

The school cannot control communicable diseases without the assistance of the parent. The child who is ill should be kept at home. The child who has a sore throat or who shows a rash of any kind should not be sent to school until he has been seen by a doctor. It is the mild cases of disease which are frequently responsible for the spread of disease.

Many children arrive at school without breakfast or else they have had a piece of cake and a cup of tea. They stay up late at night and are not rested and ready to get up in the morning. The result is they have neither the time to wash properly nor to eat their breakfast, and so they go to school dirty, hungry and tired.

That is a poor way to start the day. Under such conditions the child is unable to do his school work, and then the parents not infrequently blame the school when their child does not get on whe nthe fault is at home.

Most schools provide for the medical examination of the children. Parents should be invited to attend at the examination and when they are invited they should go. The school doctor cannot do more than advise the parent that the child requires medical attention; the school does not provide treatment."

The parent who neglects to follow the advice of the school doctor may be seriously handicapping the child. The child who requires glasses cannot do his work without them. The child who cannot breathe through his nose because of adenoids is not likely to do well in school. he parent is responsible for seeing that the child is relieved of the conditions which the school doctor brings to his attention. That is part of the team-play between the parent and the school.

OLDSMOBILE'S 34TH. BIRTHDAY

August 21 marks the thirty-fourth anniversary of the automobile as a commercial institution in North America. That date 1897, the first company to gain recognition in the commercial manufacture and sale of automobiles was officially incorporated in Lansing Michigan That was Olds Motor Works, manufacturers of Oldsmobile and now a division of General Motors and making Oldsmobiles in Canada for Canadians. But it is practically 35 years ago that this veteran company had its first inception. At that time Ransom E. Olds and Frank Clark, two young men of Lansing Mich. were busily experimenting in fitting a little gas engine into a carriage and making the contraption run. These early efforts resulted in the incorporation of the company the appointment of Olds as General Manager and the issuance of instructions for him "to build one cariage in as nearly a perfect a manner as possible." The "carriage" was completed before the close of the year and now reposes in an honor place in the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, D. C.

Then started the efforts toward commercial manufacture. and then, also started the battle which meant the sucess or failure of this infant industry. This battle had two major fronts. One was to design and operate. The second—and equaly important—was to educate the public to accept the automobile as a means of transportation.

Olsmobile performed a major shar in these tasks. In 1900 it produced 1400 cars—and sold them. Its slogan of those early days were "The Passing of the Horse", "Nothing to watch but the Road", The Best Thing on Wheels", "Good Bye, Horse", and "A Trolley Car that Needs no track

In 1903 it built the "Olds Pirate", a racing car that made a new mile record at Daytona Beach that year. It shipped the first American-made automobile to Europe and opened the first export business. It won the first Tour de France, Europe's greatest endurance and reliability run It won the first American transcontinental race with "Old Scout", a one-cylinder Oldsmobile, which now is retracing the route of this first race from New York City to Portland, Oregon, with Dwight B. Huss, the original driver, at the tiller. These are a few of the feats Oldsmobile accomplished to bring favorable attention to the capabilities of the automobile.

Much has happened durine the thirty-four years ending August 21, in fact far more than the most optimistic of these early pioneers anhas revolutionized business, pleasure and home life. It has made possible great cities with far-flung suburbs. It has changed lives and habits. And throughout it all, Oldsmobile, the pioneer, has continued well up among the leaders.

FALL FFERTILIZERS FOR STRAWBERRIES

The proper fertilization of a straw applications of a commercial fertilizer. In September the strawberry plants are forming their fruit buds for next year's crop and during this period they require good nutritional conditions to make their best effort. On land which is well supplied with fertility, particularly nitrogen, it is quite possible that further applications of fertilizer are not necessary, but very frequently a light application of a good fertilizer in late August will result in a big increase in next year's crop. An application of 200 pounds of nitrate of soda to the acre, made in late August, will assist most plantations in fruit bud formation. The nitrate should be broadcast on the plants during a perfectly dry day and immediately after the plants have adhered to the leaves. In this way little, if any, burning will result This recommendation is based on experiments conducted in the Horticultural Division, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

CALF RAISING WITHOUT SKIM-MILK

Quite often, some breedars cannot feed skim milk to their calves because the milk is sold unskimmed or is converted into cheese, or else the rules governing accreditation forbid feeding un-pasteurised skim-milk. In such cases the following system of feeding is recommended, as it has given very good results at the Experimental Station of St. Anne de la Pocatiere.

This system consist in feeding whole milk up to the age of four or five weeks and gradually leaving out all milk thereafter to feed only good clover or alfalfa hay and a mixture of special meal made up as follows: 50 pounds ground corn, 75 lbs ground oats, 50 lbs. bran, 50 lbs oilcake, 50lbs ground blood meal, 4 lbs bone meal, 4 lbs finely ground limestone, and 4 lbs salt.

The calves should get used to the meal, as soon as they are one week old; to this end, rub some of it on the nose or drop a little in the bottom of the pail after the animal has taken its milk. This mixture should be kept constantly before the calves until the age of thirty days, that is until the feeder begins to cut out the milk and the meal is fed only twice a day after weaning. Tepid water is given to replace the milk. This system must be followed until the age of six months.

The calves raised by this method may appear thin during the first 30 days after weaning The farmer must not be alarmed for the calves, the not fat, will be growing good frames and if he feels them he will notice that their weight is increasing regularly and they will soon be strong and of very good appearance with a lustrous coat

The calves raised by this system at Ste-Anne weighed on an average, at birth. 57 pounds. at one month 91 pounds, at two months 130 pounds, at three months 176 pounds, at four months 228 lbs. at five months 280 pounds and at six months 333 pounds
