ing sound now, and heavy, labored breathing.

John Bruce silently end stealthily stretched out his arm. He could just reach the screen. It was made of some soft, silken material, and his back a little from the edge of that portion of the upright framework which was directly in front of the upright framework which was directly in front of him.

He scarcely breathed now. Perhaps he was in so weak a state that his brain must be taken the was one so the floor and the the big man began to close the further, he was sure, if they would not be taken to the tune of the bagpipes.

On Thursday morning, following breakfasts, we visited the T. Eaton Company's new store. After seeing the horses and wagons depart on their daily rounds, we were shown through the building, it being the finest of its kind in the world. It is think faltered if crowded, for there was so much to see that he could not seem to grasp it all as a single picture. He gazed fascinated The details came slowly—one by one.
