going again around the weapon that lay there—

And then he looked at Hawkins and stared again at the other, startled. Strange, he had not noticed it before! The smile on Hawkins' face did not hide it. The man seemed to have aged a thousand years; the old face was pinched and worn, and his eyes and his hand on the other's were hurt and agony. And a great sympathy for the man surged upon John Bruce. He could not tell Hawkins, but— He reached out, arm.

"Don't take it too hard, Hawkins," he said gently. "I—perhaps—perhaps—well, there's a last chance that something may happen."

"Me?" said Hawkins and bent down over his gear as he got the signal to move forward. "Do I look like that? I—I thought it all out last night, and I don't feel that way. I'll tell you what I was thinking about: I was just thinking that I did something today when I left my room that I haven't done before—in twenty years. I've left the light burning."

John Bruce stared a little helplessly.

"Yes," said Hawkins. He smiled at John Bruce. "Don't you worry about me. Maybe you don't understand, but that's all I've been thinking about since we've been waiting here. I've left the light burning."

Sick at heart, John Bruce turned his head away. He made no response.

Hawkins paid the fare, ran the car through the ferry house, and aboard the ferry itself. He was fumbling with a catch of some kind behind his seat, as he proceeded slowly up the run-way.

"He'll want a little air in there," said Hawkins, "because it's close down here. It opens back, you know—the whole panel. I had it made that way when the car was turned into a travelling pawn-shop—didn't know what tough kind of customer Paul might run into some time, and I'd want to get in beside him quick to help, and I—"

The old cabman straightened up. The car was at the extreme forward end of the ferry—and suddenly it leaped forward. "Jump! John Bruce! Jump clear!" old Hawkins cried. "There's only two of us going all the way—"

"John!"

He buried his face in the great mass of hair that fell around his head. "No, he was not weak! He could hold her here always—"

"And—Hawkins, John?" she asked.

He lifted his head and stared at the water. Little waves rippled across its surface, gambling incessantly—play. There wasn't anything else there. There would be no answer.

"How—how did it happen?" she whispered again.

"I think—a gear jammed, or something," he said huskily.

He heard her speak again but her words were very low. He bent his head until it rested upon hers to catch the words.

"Dear, dear Hawkins—dear Daddy," she said.

A great mist seemed to gather before John Bruce's eyes. A voice seemed to come again. Hawkins' voice; and words that he understood now, Hawkins' words: "I've left the light burning."

The End.

FOR almost a quarter century General Motors cars have been owned and loved throughout Canada under every conceivable road and traffic condition. This varied experience of almost three-quarters of a million owners has directed the General Motors of Canada, Limited, in the improvement of all its cars. This has aided in the determination of body styles, types and appointments. It has increased factors of safety, utility and comfort. By interpreting the needs and wishes of his own public throughout constant experiment and development, General Motors is able to build cars of well-rounded completeness.

And thus a vast and far-flung owner experience makes its contribution to the outstanding values in General Motors cars. It is through a splendid body of dealers—men of substance in their respective localities. These men sell and service General Motors cars because they, experts in the automotive field, themselves appreciate General Motors values. They attend to your advantage of buying on time payments through GMAC, General Motors' own low rate plan, and pledge your continued satisfaction with the General Motors Owner Service Policy. Malvern Calls To Drama-Lovers

As Malvern's beacon blazed forth the news of the Armada over the little English town, a sailing of the Canadian Pacific officers' "Empresses" and "Durbesses" from Quebec to Southampton and Montreal to Liverpool, respectively, make excellent connections with the various weeks of the festival at Malvern, and will include the palatial new "Empress of Britain," the biggest and fastest ship in service between British Empire ports.

Shakespeare's immortal Stratford-upon-Avon. This year's program includes known and unknown English productions dating from 1513 to 1931 and is dedicated to George Bernard Shaw, to whom Sir Barry is looking to produce a new play, as the principal item of the bill, as he did "The Apple Cart," at the original Malvern Festival. The festival runs from August 3 to 22, inclusive, consisting of three repeated weeks of plays and a series of lectures by well-known authorities. Malvern is only 125 miles from London, but Gloucester and Worcester, both cities of considerable size and offering first-class hotels, are within easy reach. The town itself is also making special arrangements for the comfort of visitors during festival time. In addition to this the whole section of England situated with villages and small towns with good accommodation for travellers, and is criss-crossed with railways and excellent automobile roads, in scenery of unsurpassed splendor.
