thing that crushed her fortune, and beaten things. A tear fell and splashed upon the page—and still another. She kept looking at the letter, tho she could only see it through a blinding mist.

CHAPTER XVI "What lucks His Chops?" Outside the house Crang continued to run. He was unconscious that he had forgotten his hat.

An old woman, his housekeeper, whose here feet had obviously been thrust hurriedly into slippers, and who clutched at the neck of a woolen dressing gown that also obviously and with equal haste, had been flung around her shoulders over her nightgown, finally opened the door.

"What are you going to do with him?" Her voice was very low. "The promise that I gave you was on the condition that he lived—not only then but now."

"I'll tell you" said Crang, with a brutal viciousness. "It's a professional gambler, this supposedly wealthy gentleman of leisure. He works for a man in San Francisco named Larson, who really is wealthy, but who passes as a pillar of the town, or words to that effect. Never mind how, but Larson will be here tonight in New York—just at the right moment. And Mr. Bruce was very kindly consented to assist in convincing Mr. Larson that he was a gambler, and then an applied the brush to the lower edge of the letter. The experiment was purely a test of the camel-hair brush.

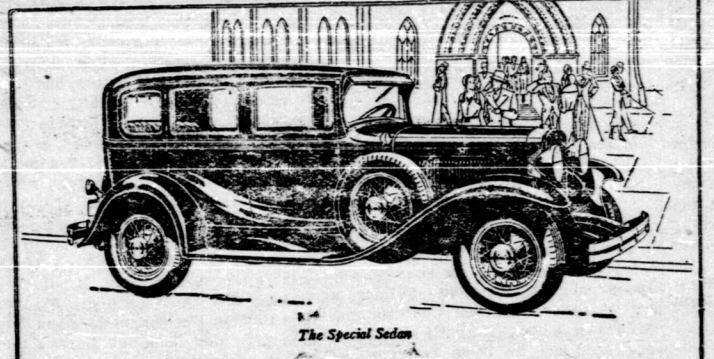

GROW MORE ALFALFA Alfalfa, the "King of Legumes", is undoubtedly the most valuable hay crop we have in this county. Its high protein and mineral content, and high yield per acre make it the most suitable crop which can be grown to supplement other farm grown feeds.

pected below. A fine seed bed on top is necessary, not only for growing the young plants but also for planting the seed which can easily be drilled at uniform depth. (4) INOCULATED. Even though alfalfa or seed clover has been raised on the farm and in this particular field, it is wise before sowing to inoculate the seed with certain bacteria which are essential to the successful growth of alfalfa. Inoculation is easily done and it is cheap insurance against a poor stand where other conditions are made right. Inoculation may be accomplished by purchasing the culture and following the directions which go with it.
