CHAPTER XXXIII

"This time next week," Chris...
"Think of it," she said, raising her...
"And when you marry you," Chris...
"Why shouldn't I remember it...
"She was heavy, silent again...
"Why, why not?" He was trying to...
"Because I don't want you to...
"And again she raised her...
"I don't want a Russian...
"Mary Kate went on with her...
"We had a great adventure," Chris...
"Exactly. And then you could say...
"Worldly!"
"Oh, I forgot this." He drew out...
"It was a small pocketbook and ex...
"The table, Mary Kate looked down...
"What is it?" she asked.

Eye Made in Canada Goods

"What is so significant in the bond?" she asked slowly.
"Not quite. But please—" he started. Upon his face was the kindest, the most simple and genuine expression she had ever seen there.
"With the faintest possible shadow she accepted the gift of the slip of paper and put it into her bag. She made no other acknowledgment of it.
"When are you going to be married?" Chris asked.
"When I return home," she answered.
"When am I?" I don't know," she answered.
"It will be soon, won't it? I mean, May or June?"
"I told Cass—" Mary Kate rested her elbows on the table, and smiling faintly, narrowing her eyes, looking into space. Her chin rested on her linked fingers. "I told Cass on Sunday that it would probably be never," she admitted.
"There was an instant quick from Chris' watching face.
"What do you mean by that?"
"I mean—what I said."
"But why?"
"She had gone further now than she had intended to go. But a spirit of daring, a yearning in her own direction, pushed her on."
"Suppose I had met somebody—'bird better," she asked, simply, with an innocent, wide-eyed smile.
"You mean," Chris altered it, after a pause, "you mean suppose you liked someone you thought you liked?"
"Mary Kate considered this. "What's the difference, she presently demanded, "between liking a person, and thinking you like a person?"
"You could be deceived about it, couldn't you?"
"What?" she was thinking about it, searching for words. "You could find out you had mistaken, I suppose," she frowned.
"Exactly. And then you could say to yourself, 'I gave up what would go for what?'"
"Worldly!"
"Oh, I forgot this." He drew out a small neat pocketbook and examined it. It was a folded cheque, opened, and pushed it toward her across the table. Mary Kate looked down at it.

A Tree That Kills Bears

The big bear of Bismarck Swamp, standing on all fours, as it cooed in a trap, was in peculiar position, most curious.

The surveyor, Maywood Robey, working in the North Carolina section, was the great glory of the area.

With little time, John Francis Ariza tells us in a collection of bear stories, the Bismarck Swamp bear was dead—impaled on a Cypress tree.

The bear had been dead but a few days. Mr. Ariza tells us in a collection of bear stories, the Bismarck Swamp bear was dead—impaled on a Cypress tree.

One For Waiting

It was a bitterly cold day, and a passenger on a journey in the North of Scotland was looking for the train to stop so that he could jump out and get a drink to warm him up. He was waiting for a long time, but finally a train came. He got on, but the train was so full that he had to stand. He was waiting for a long time, but finally a train came. He got on, but the train was so full that he had to stand.

The dog was the first to see it. He was on the chair for many centuries...
"You're not wrong," Mary Kate said, at last, steadily, in a constrained voice.
"Not" he echoed, in a constrained voice.
"The girl got her hands suddenly on the table and covered her face with her hands, looking awfully sorry."
"Chris said quickly, 'There was a pause.'
"Well, what of it?" she asked then, smilingly.
"Just that I wanted to say this," Chris began, after watching her for a moment.
"You're not in love with me, you do you?"
"Thank you," Mary Kate answered.
"I'm thirty-three. I'm nearly thirty-four."
"You're not in love with me, you do you?"
"Thank you," Mary Kate answered.
